EYES SHOULD BE EXAMINED ONCE A YEAR AT LEAST, SOME EYES MORE OFTEN

Patients often come to us and say that they have not had their glasses more than five years and they think glasses ought to last longer than that. Others say they know their glasses are all right yet, because they have worn them not much over two years. Some even imagine that glasses that were correct once ought to be all right the rest of their lives. The great majority of the people seem to think that every three or four years is often enough to have their eyes examined.

Every part of your body is continually changing, old cells departing and new cells taking their place. Your eyes are not immune from these changes, so in order to keep them in shape to perform the tasks that you demand of them, you should be put with an exam and have them examined AT LEAST ONCE A YEAR.
