THE OLD FARMHOUSE

(Anita Lasaie Cushing)

The hobbling shadow of a lost calling
The willow-walled well is such a friendly thing;
And warm across the deep old kitchen hearth
There comes the sweet and spicy, comforting
Fragrance of peaches, by some chemistry
Known only in that shining scented place
Being distilled to gold translucency.
Precarious on this hill, small flowers grace
The dooryard, as though loving the dirt path.
The worn old steps of deeply timbered wood,
The roof slopes close against a giant oak.
And finds the wide-branched towering shelter good.
How dear that place to us who know it best!
A peace is here past clumsy words to tell—
A dignity and sweetness and content,
Because it has been loved so long and well.
