"General Apathy" Is A Vicious Leader.

Overconfidence on the part of a political party breeding as it does an apathy upon the part of individual voters who look upon the battle as won, has laid many a political statement.

Despite the encouraging outlook, the apparent certainty of success in November, The Mercury would warn Democrats that there may be no resting upon our arms in this campaign, if success is to be achieved in the approaching election.

Our friends, the Republicans, are pleased to encourage the spirit of boundless optimism that prevails in Democratic ranks. In fact, you will find them admitting that chances of Republican success in November are slim. At the same time, they are vigorously at work perfecting an organization that will be most liberally financed. In the vernacular of their ward politicians, they are "loaded with money" this year. That, in a year when every other man you meet is beset by the heart-break of financial worry, is a weapon of dangerous potentiality.

With their own organization, which is now being perfected, functioning with energy and vigorous thoroughness, Democrats need have no fear of the result in November. But if they begin now to look upon the battle as won; if they foolishly underestimate the strength of a political opponent; prodigiously endowed with the financial sinews of political conflict, organized down to the precinct and fighting with back to the wall, surprising things may happen.

Conditions are highly favorable to Democratic success in Kentucky this fall; economic conditions bolster our cause; a man of sound common sense, who has experienced the problems of life and who labors in the furrowed fields and has a sympathetic born of understanding, for him who earns his bread in the sweat of his brow, heads our ticket—yet, despite all this, too boundless an optimism, a lessening of our cause to the leadership of that most vicious of political perils, "General Apathy," may easily prove fatal to our hopes.

Indications of Democratic success this fall are abundant. Conditions forecast it; the unenviable record of the State Senate of the Republican party during the last four years at Frankfort commands a chaster, the people seek relief in State and National affairs from the theories of government, as promulgated by the Republican party, theories that have resulted in the enrichment of the few, the impoverishment of the many. And yet, it is folly to underestimate the strength of an opponent, rich, resourceful, organized.

From distant challenges to the humblest precinct worker, there must be no evasion of self, no looking on, but a spirit of fight until the polls close in November.

"Ham, Lamb, Sheep And Mutton."

The most heated campaign that ever took place in Kentucky is about to be staged by prognosticators here made for the speakership of the Democratic State Committee at Winchester, September 12, to hear Judge Ruby LaFoon speech made by Gus Jordan's Kansas troops, will be served free to all.

Back in the early nineties, the Tri district, or more frequently called, in those days, the "Ashland district," was the scene of a red-hot knock-down-and-drag-out fight between Col. W. C. P. Breckinridge and W. C. Owens. Democrats of that district, in the modernity of their barbarity, held weekly or semi-weekly pushaw and attacked each other's character with the vilest of epithets. Some of these had recently disinterred carcasses of Mr. Owens, who had been dead for many years, and had dragged the bones from his resting place and slung mud at them, credited, "Hon." Such camp and mud slinging, Democratic style, is to be resumed in the present campaign, we are told, and there was especially.

Chick Lawrence, in the old Ashland district, has not forgotten how to throw a barbecue of the old-fashioned kind. There will be hams, lamb, sheep and mutton "on the hoof" in the crowds that will trek to Winchester on Saturday, September 12, to hear Judge Ruby LaFoon open the campaign.

Quit Guessing.

It is the opinion of this newspaper that State and Federal interest in charge of agricultural matters would do well to quit prize-guessing in the matter of farm products. Predictions by such outsiders as no better than any well informed farmer's guess and serve no purpose, as we see it, unless it be to depress the price of the product.

A recent prediction from such a source in Kentucky, setting the price of tobacco this fall at 15 cents, may be in harm, can do no good. Prize-prophesy should not be included in the range of a farm bureau's activities.

A Deficit And A Platform Ballyhoo.

Article 19 of the Republican Platform says:

"The business of the State should be conducted with the same efficiency and economy as the business of an individual. The Republican party believes that the time is peculiarly appropriate to offer as its candidate for Governor a business man who has demonstrated by his conduct of the affairs of a great municipality that he can and will conduct the still larger affairs of Kentucky."

The Louisville Courier-Journal of Friday, September 27th, carried this news story, from which the following excerpts are quoted.

"The Board of Sinking Fund Commissioner's proposed budget for the fiscal year 1931-1932, submitted to Director of Finance J. J. Kunz Thursday, requests $1,308,984.16 from the city's tax revenue, more than $500,000 more than the amount allotted last year. The budget also revealed that a deficit of $1,122,944.79 existed December 31, 1930. This was attributed by Lawrence D. Baldauf, secretary and treasurer of the commissioners, to increased amount of bond issues with corresponding increases in interest, and failure to replenish the fund. Requirements in the proposed budget were listed as follows: Bond interest requirements, $1,526,289.50; sinking fund requirements for the retirement of bonds, $645,879, and office expenses, $72,000, a total of $2,244,168.50."

Comment from those who oppose Mr. Harrison's election for Governor of Kentucky seems superfluous.

And it is amusing in this connection to read in Article 9 of the Republican Platform this statement:

"We realize that the heaviest burden of taxation is imposed by local authority and not by the State."

The deficit of $1,366,944.16 in the Sinking Fund Accounts of the City of Louisville for the fiscal year 1931-1932 seems to prove conclusively that the Republicans may not be accused as to the truth of the platform statement referred to above.

Making A Lounge-Lizard Of Frank Merriwell.

As Time smiles, trots and gallops on the years seem there petals many of the fine and fond illusions of youth. Some leave us painlessly, others rend us mightily in their passing. We yearn after a while to be disillusioned about it and accept as inevitable the fact that the price of worldly wisdom is disillusion.

But when someone deliberately sets about destroying one of the idols of our juvenile worship, we resent the intrusion, manslaughter and murder and provokes us to commit one of these upon the perpetrator.

Let's go back a bit, you that remember when folk marveled at the feerless of Nick Carter and Old Cap Collier, were in pertinuse in superimposed layers and others were expected to be seen and not heard. Let us go back a bit, kid-sit, or behind the barn, or in the attic, or at that over the keyhole and a pal holding against the threshold so that the telltale streak of light would not betray the followers of the horrible fact that one of those dime novels was being greedily consumed by the fire. Let's get ready to take flight to the realm of fancy at the first warning of parental approach. You the is sure will remember the Tip Top Weekly, of the colorful cover of a lad in the toga fellow—Frank Merriwell's Fifty or Five Hundred Dollars." Remember that one? Ha, ha, you do. Remember Burt L. Standish wrote for Street& Smith, and as we remember a mighty good chunkin' They weren't "dime novels" for they cost a nickel and we want to state here and now for the benefit of those parents who believed that the reading of such literature as this forbidden fare, that we believe Burt L. Standish did more to stimulate clean living and right thinking among the youth of the nation than any of the Frank Merriwell stories than any writer of juvenile fiction before or since. But, to get back to our prove.

You who remember the first automobile—with the accent on the "heel"—you, who knew a man called "Commodore," you, who worshiped the pride of Fardale Academy, the Frank Merriwell of the "double curve" that astounded opposing batters, the hero of countless breath-taking adventures, and unsupportable feats of athletic prowess, can you picture Merriwell the "wise-cracking" with a modern flapper in abbreviated skirts, with painted lips and plucked eyebrows? Yet that's what a current exhibit has done to Frank.

They are making a lounge-lizard out of the hero of old Tip Top Weekly, the anathematize nirwith—and we won't read their contrived and cultish any more.

"Runs A Scared Race."

Senator Allie Young, self-admitted popular in his district, winning recently by an overwhelming majority, always it is said, runs a scared race." Senator Young, in the face of the admonitions of the seventh of the months of underestimating the strength of the enemy, no matter how weak his opposition may be, has never entered primary campaign, so far as we know, probably the only man among his adherents who expressed any confidence of victory.

The Mercury agrees with Senator Young that it is much better to regard one's political opponent with respect than to return cheerful to the false security of overconfidence.

Gray Days For Our Feathered Friends.

Now is the time for gray days for our feathered friends in earnest. The song of nesting time the full-throated eagerness of fledgling days for the most part are over for the season of September.

The red-eyed vireo sings on and the plaintive note of the wood pewee grows more and more subdued as autumn from the depths of the cool woods but the silent cadence of Maryland Yellow Throat is heard no more. The nuptial chatter of purple martins no longer enlivens the air with its constant twittering. The first flight scouts of the bobwhites are out for autumn forays, long before first frosts come to nip the buds of autumn.

Soon the wild geese will be honking overhead on their way to the southland and the woodpeckers will be at work on the hollow trees. Soon the bluebirds will be flocking together in preparation for their journey southward. It is going to be a sad day indeed for the feathered friends when the hunting season comes around.

Every hunter—and Mr. Hunter will retain his "happy hunting" ground on publication—Carrollton Democrat.

HARRISON AND HIGH TAXES

(Bismarck Journal)

Mayor Harrison has asked for a budget of twelve million dollars for the year 1932. This is an increase of $300,000 over last year. Since Mr. Harrison has been Mayor taxes have increased to the limit. Bonds to the amount of many millions have been issued. Yet the people are still asked to be elected Governor. Of course he can not help now—what the people want is lower taxes and more efficient government. It is going to be hard indeed to elect a high tax man. Governor of this state. If Kentucky was rolling in wealth, had no indebtedness and it matured not how much money was expended for government operation, then no doubt "Silver Bow Blair" Harrison would make an ideal Governor. But what Kentucky needs now is a man who knows how to save, not how to spend.

Warning On Typhoid And Dysentery Is Issued

Typhoid fever and dysentery continue the subject of a timely warning just issued by Dr. J. L. Jones, epidemiologist of the State Board of Health. While there are no epidemics of either of these diseases in Kentucky many cases of both are being reported to the State Health Department from various sections of the Commonwealth. In view of this end of the fact that late Summer and early Fall are the seasons when typhoid and dysentery are apt to be most prevalent, it is urged that every possible precaution be taken to prevent further spread of the diseases.

Every case of typhoid and dysentery, it is pointed out, comes from swallowing the germs or seeds of these diseases and each disease germs come from just one source, this source is the waste matter, that is the bowel and kidney discharges, of human beings who are sick with the disease or else are carriers of the germs.

"Carriers" are persons who, although not sick with the disease themselves, have typhoid and dysentery germs growing in their bodies.

When human wastes coming from typhoid and dysentery cases or from "carriers" are disposed of in an insanitary way, they are apt, says Dr. Jones, to get into water, milk and other foods, and so, it is through such agencies that typhoid fever and dysentery are transmitted to well persons. Water is usually infected by sewage and surface drainage, while milk and other foods are apt to be infected by flingers of flies coming in contact with the germs of these diseases. If all waste from typhoid cases is pointed out, could always be replaced as to be inaccessible to flies and could not be carried on the hands, fingers, or get into sources of drinking water or into foods, typhoid and other foods, no person would have typhoid fever or dysentery.

Prevention of typhoid fever and dysentery, in the opinion of Dr. Jones, may be summed up in the one word "sanitation." And by sanitation is meant not only clean foods, especially milk, and clean water and clean foods, but clean persons and surroundings. Typhoid fever and dysentery have always prevailed where sanitation is neglected and have diminished where it has been intelligently observed.

The following are the precautions against typhoid and dysentery given by Dr. Jones:

1. Drink only water which has been pronounced safe by the health officer.

2. If the water supply is polluted or there is any doubt about it, drink only well water used for drinking, bathing, for washing foods and for washing dishes and cooking utensils. Chlorination will make polluted water safe, but your health officer as to the proper method of doing this.

3. Scald dishes and tableware.

4. Wash the hands in soap and running water before eating and after using the toilet.

5. Every householder should insist that premises, getting rid of filth, manure, and other breeding places for flies and maintain all privies fly-proof and sanitary.

Many Attractions Offered At Kentucky State Fair

A full quota of exhibits that will demonstrate the progress made in Kentucky is making in the domains of agriculture, horticulture, live stock, manufacture and industry will greet the throngs of visitors attending the twenty-second annual State Fair to be held in Louisville September 14-19, inclusive, according to Tate Reed, secretary.

"Kentuckians," said Mr. Reed, "are a fair-loving people and it is unfortunate that many of our county fairs have to be abandoned this year because of economic conditions For thousands of these people Kentucky State Fair will bridge the gap this year and serve to make a memorable meeting place for a community to come to Louisville and make their 'fair home' with us for the one week."

A superb recreational feature of the State Fair, Mr. Reed said, will be the "Fiesta of 1931—The World at Play," scheduled for the entire week as an evening grandstand attraction. Features of this entertainment will include concerts by the Royal Scotch Highlanders Band, the Chicago Grand Opera quartette, ballet chorus and adagio dancers and an animal circus Bobbie Brollier, Scotch comedian, will act as master of ceremonies and Boy Scout Jamboree, to be held in Louisville in September, will contribute a number of fine boys, all having a good time.

CO. AGENT NOTES

R. J. Matson, County Agent

James Wade of Myers, Route 1 has 22 kershaws on one vine. This holds the record so far as we know.

Farmers who listen in for livestock quotations from Cincinnati over WLW will find a change of time in the broadcast. The morning broadcast will begin at 8 a. m. and the noon broadcast 11:50, Central time. The afternoon broadcast will be discontinued. These changes began August 31.

Hog cholera is becoming numerous in many sections, according to Federal Veterinarians and stock yard companies. Very few farmers in Nicholas county have hogs and are endeavoring to purchase shoats to grow their own meat. Care should be obtained to secure healthy stock, which should then be vaccinated by a competent Veterinarian which is the only way to control hog cholera according to R. J. Matson, County Agent.

R. J. Matson received a card from Julian Atkinson, 4-H Club member from Nicholas county, who is at the American Youth Foundation Camp at Shadowland, Michigan
