THE LITTLE GREEN ORCHARD

Some one is always sitting there,
In the little green orchard;
Even when the sun is high
In moon's unclouded sky,
And faintly drooping goes
The bee from rose to rose,
Some one in shadow is sitting there,
In the little green orchard.

Yes, and when twilight is falling softly
On the little green orchard;
When the gray grey dove
And some early fireflies
Where the last blackbird says,
"What—what!" and goes her way—
I have heard voices calling softly
In the little green orchard.

Only it's strange to be feeling there,
In the little green orchard;
Whether you paint or drive,
Dig, hammer, chop, or saw;
Whether you are mad alone,
All but the silence gone—
Some one is waiting and watching there,
In the little green orchard.
