Faithfully Upholding Our Standard

IN THIS period of stress, when nearly all of us are hard pressed to keep our business heads above water, The Mercury has followed its policy of giving subscribers a newspager of which they need not be ashamed.

It has not been easy to do this. Advertising has fallen off almost to the vanishing point and the sale of advertising space constitutes the life-blood of any newspaper. Without advertising, any newspaper will soon be forced to cut its standard of excellence through drastic reduction of overhead, or go out of business.

We might fill our columns with boilerplate and save money; we might reduce the number of pages, and thus reduce expenses, but at the same time we would not be upholding our standard of a good weekly newspaper.

Subscribers with whom we have been lenient during these hard times can help us uphold our standard by paying subscriptions now due and past due. If not convenient to pay for a year, pay for six months. Help us to give you a paper you will enjoy reading.
