plant electricity is produced in great volume and at low cost. But it is not ready for

It must be transformed to a lower voltage to fit it for household use. It must be transmitted to the point at which it is to be used—at whatever time it is needed.

Elaborate and complex facilities must be maintained constantly so that demands for sergice can be met instantly, no matter where or when they occur.

And the power used by each customer must be measured and recorded, a bill sent and collected.

collected.

All this takes place after the power is produced. Little wonder then that the cost of electricity at the power plant is only a fraction of its final delivered cost. And still electricity is the cheapest thing you can buy.
