THE SONG SPARROW RETURNS

(Eleanor G. B. Young)

At last I hear your lilting melody—
Your eager, vibrant song of utter joy!
Here, where the earth is blanketed with white,
Your gay, familiar notes delight my heart.
It is a summons, little feathered friend,
To all the waiting bulbs, the growing things,
To venture out upon their pilgrimage!
Will your sweet music waken ice-bound streams
And send them running swiftly on their way?
Ah, you have told me in emphatic tones
That spring is running toward me on swift feet,
And yet the sky lowers somber-toned and gray!

Until I heard your merry, morning song
I, too, believed that winter was still here.
But now, no pelt of hurrying, wind-driven snow
Can stop the song that trembles in my throat.
The dogwood trees have heard your message, too,
Already their round buds are swelling up
And every willow tree wears strands of gold
Where its bare arms wave in the tensile wind.

Your certain song of promise has aroused
Expectant gladness in the waiting earth.
Down garden paths that look so wintry now
Green are the yellow cowslips not
As they will go in just a few weeks
Lift on their heads above the muddy soil
Triumphantly, your notes of gladness rise—
I catch the scent of lilacs while you sing!

Pardon Hall is on probation. Unbecoming conduct causes it to be withdrawn. Cool canceled it in every case where it was not extended to others. The ten thousand talents debtor represented Israel. But the pardoned believers in Israel had no thought of entering the mercy they had received with the despised alien, who had none of the light and privilege which was Israel's portion.
