May Pay Well To Fatten Turkeys

The poultry department at the Agricultural Experiment Station at Lexington believes it may pay turkey farmers to grow a good fatten on turkey farms. It has found that the best way to fatten turkeys is to feed them a diet of corn and soybean meal. This diet is cheap and easy to grow. The station also suggests that turkey farmers should use a good variety of breeds and should keep their flocks healthy.

AN OVER-CROWDED PRISON

The state reformatory at Frankfort is now one of the most overcrowded in the South. The prison is filled with inmates who are awaiting trial or serving sentences. The conditions are cramped and unsanitary. There is a lack of adequate food and medical care. The overcrowding is a serious problem that needs to be addressed. The state government should take steps to improve the conditions of the prison and provide better care for the inmates.

EXTENSIVE PROGRAM FOR BETTER POULTRY

The Kentucky Poultry Improvers' Association is sponsoring an extensive program to improve the quality of poultry in the state. The program includes providing information to farmers, holding exhibitions, and distributing improved stock. The association is working to help farmers raise healthy and productive flocks. This is a significant effort to improve the poultry industry in Kentucky.

TURKEY DECIDES TO RAZE GRAND BAZAAR

Washington--Turkey, in its declaration of independence, has decided to raze the Grand Bazaar in Istanbul. The bazaar is a large and historic market that has been a central part of the city's economy for centuries. The decision to raze the bazaar is a controversial one and has caused much debate. Some believe it is a necessary step for modernization, while others see it as the destruction of a cultural and economic heritage.
