Reynolds, of Carlisle, has presented to the Kentucky Historical Society a 22-pound cannon ball that was used by the Battle of New Orleans, but for which the spectators standing on the battle field was given to Mr. Cooke by Dr. Hess, of Owingsville, grandson of the man who made it. During the War of 1812, the Meyers Iron Foundry at Owingsville had a contract with the government to make a large consignment of cannon balls to be shipped down the Licking river in barges and thence by the Ohio and Mississippi to New Orleans. The old ball is one of the number rejected and left at the foundry.

APRIL TRYST

Now, I rejoice, that I may walk once more
With April, down her bright'y greening lane.
Where bursting buds, and birds' gay matin strain
Proclaim the spring; there feel the sunshine pour
Its golden wealth on forest fed plain.
Of ice-free streams, that ripple to the main.
Where wood blooms and new gardens vie, in vain,
To hold the longer sight, with beauty's store.

The creeping grass, the maples tassled sheets,
The red buds, violets, and daffodils,
The walking verdure on the climbing hills,
All stir fresh hope, when April's face is seen.
And, were I cold and silent in last sleep,
April would summon me, a tryst to keep,
—Ethel Knapp Behrman in the Cincinnati Enquirer.
