How Do Animals Spend The Winter

Has little Johnny or Mary ever asked you where the birds and animals go on what they do in the winter time? Of course, as long as we do not go too deeply into the matter the explanation is easy enough. There are just two or three ways in which animals live through the dormant months of the year. They may either hibernate or they may hibernate and go into the "winter sleep" which they may remain in for several months. There are two courses open to those remaining in the same locality or they may move to more temperate regions. Many kinds choose the latter course and the fall months are full of millions of them winging their way to the north. It is time to return to their own homes in the north. Apparently instinct alone determines the time of these migrations. Of course, there are all kinds of weather "signs" or prophecies based on those migratory habits but little dependence can be placed on these for even a hint may under-estimate the weather. Some of the birds remain in their regular haunts winter and summer and even robins, those faithful harbingers of spring, have been known to remain north through out the year.

For animals, however, migrate with the seasons. Many of them, such as the quail, remain in the same locality through the winter. A tobacco manufacturer left Joseph Kelly, Christian county, to take the fall crop of tobacco. He had been told that the crop would be good. He had been told that the crop would be good. He had been told that the crop would be good.

On the other hand there are other animals, such as the bear, which may retire in the fall and sleep through the winter. Although there are many speculations for this hibernating no one knows for certain the true reason as to why they hibernate. It is thought that many of them hibernate because of the lack of food during the winter months. There are many other reasons, however, for this hibernating and snakes may go into hibernation while the weather is still warm and turtles bask in the sun during the fall. Grasshoppers and crickets hibernate in the ground. Many of the insects hibernate in the ground. Many of the insects hibernate in the ground.

So, I thought, when trouble comes, who should we cease our singing? For just beyond the hill it may be that golden sunshine from the green world still. He also faces trouble with a heart that moves the trucker soldier. It was a fair year. Success is the soldier in the soldier's hour.

Four specimens of the purple-billed grebe were found in the New Mexico. Their age is put at about 20,000 years.

Many of the lower forms of life survive the winter in the larva or "egg" stage. Some insects, such as the grasshopper, hibernate in the ground. Many of the insects hibernate in the ground. Many of the insects hibernate in the ground.
