Nine Hundred Million Tax Bill Is Launched

Republican demands for "national solvency" and Democratic insistence that legislators are not rubber stamps for the Administration started through congress Monday a tax bill estimated to raise anything from $118,000,000 to $901,500,000 a year.

Secretary Morgenthau of the Treasury supplied the initial push by submitting to the House ways and means committee estimates of what would be produced by applying various tax rates to individual and corporation incomes, and to inheritances and gifts. The White House proposed these wealth levies and indicated they should be the limit of the session's tax legislation.

In all, the committee schedules were returned to that group with requested Treasury estimates and the comment from Morgenthau that they are devised to draw on accumulations of wealth and income which, for the most part, have been derived from failure-wage activities.

The latest schedule would tax income between $100,000 and $150,000 at 36 per cent as compared with the present 56, and income over $7,500,000 at 84 per cent against the present 62 per cent. The highest would tax $100,000 incomes 60 per cent and increase to 94 per cent on incomes over $10,000,000.

Corporation income levies were within a range of 10 per cent on incomes under $2,000 to 17½ per cent on those over $1,000,000 as against the present flat 13¾ per cent.

Millie's Best Customer

By RUTH KELLY
© Macfadden Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

MILLIE FLETCHER'S voice was an echo of the sheer white spoon that strolled her fine body when it passed beside the young man sitting alone under the hickory.

"Your order, please?"

The young man rumpled his shock of red hair and frowned over the menu. But he wasn't reading it. He couldn't. He was holding it upside down.

"Millie," he said softly, "marry me tonight."

Millie's cheeks went a deep pink. "Your order, please?"

"It's still the same," said the young man patiently. This time his eyes sought hers—her eyes, frankly loving. "Will you, Millie?"

Millie began to write, fast and furiously. Her voice came out in staccato like jerks.

"Tomato juice, breaded veal cutlet, home fried potatoes. Coffee?"

"Millie—"

But Millie with a quick turn on her slim French heels was gone, in swift retreat to the kitchen.

Through the slats of the swinging door she just avoided collision with a pile of plates held by Mabel, the dishwasher. Mabel was one of the regulars at the Presidential, started in by Millie, who knew.

"Oh, Mabel! Millie gasped wickedly. "He's a pal and take my table—please?" Mabel's frowning face broke and relaxed in surprise.

"Sold! Is your art class so early?"

"No. It's not that, I just want to trade jobs with you for a while. Will you, Mabel?"

It wasn't just an ordinary request. From Mabel knew that. So she waved Millie out with a flick of her hand.

"I get it," she nodded. "He's the nicest fellow you've waited on in a month. What'll I tell him if he asks for you?"

"Tell him anything. Tell him I've gone."

Mabel tossed toward the door, slank but far behind.

"As if I could believe it. You don't get rid of him that easy. Why, I bet you marry him and be done with it!"

She didn't wait for an answer. And Millie didn't give her one. Instead she gently tossed the swinging door behind her, flipping him her pocket, and she felt the tension of her nerves begin slipping. At the doorway of the kitchen she shed them entirely. She looked down the wet curves of her cheeks from the steam from the kettles of workers and on the hot water fumed.

Her hands went deep in dish suds when a firm step behind her caused her to turn. Mabel stood there, hatless, smiling.

"Don't blame me," he said, picking up a towel off the rack. "It was the manager's idea. You were waiting on him with a delicious dinner you ordered for two but I didn't have the money to pay for it. So the manager asked me how I'd like to wash the dishes. And wasn't that a break?"

Millie's hands clutched the sides of the sink her eyes blazed into his.

"I don't believe it. I don't believe you didn't have the money. You just said that to get me out of here. And I won't keep coming here—you can't."

"But I've got to, Millie. Don't you know—"

"I see all right!" Millie reached into her pocket for a fistful of bright bills, threw it toward him. Plunging her hands into the dish water, she went on, "I see by the paper that we're having a big time ago. Everything's changed now. Why, you're a big Europe tobaggin all alone."

"I don't believe it," said Millie. "Besides, you gave her a ring, the ring that I—"

"That you turned down." He was doing things to the dishes, those were twisting it into knots. "Yes, I secret the boss's daughter. She's got curly ringlets and you start thinking things. Excuse listed for a minute. I'll get that wear it. But get this—" he snatched at a cup on the drain board, gave it a swipe—"she's wearing it now. And she's calling for Europe without me."

"No," said Millie again in a dislocated voice, "you walked out on me."

"Not exactly," he blew a bubble over to the dishwashing corps of The Blue Door applied a wiping motion to the dishdrawing, "she walked out on you."

"Oh," said Millie again in a dislocated voice, "you walked out on me?"

"Wrong again." The china bowl fell to the table with a clatter. The dish towel, just a round wet ball now, missed Millie's head by inches as the hair's breadth and landed in the sink with a plop. The voice was Mabel's, and was tense.

"We talked it over. I told her I didn't like the kind of meals they serve at we. I told her I preferred The Blue Door to the cafeteria. I told her I'd love to have some more evening dresses in a familiar part of town—I told Millie. I told her I love her."

Millie's crisp white apron was a mess when she swung around. Her hands hatred young man's arms a minute before to gone at the solution that Mabel had looked at her from her engagement ring. And the stormy sea gone out of her voice too as she murmured softly, her cheek against a rough jet, "I'd almost forgotten how beautiful it is!"

Union service at our church Sunday night at 7:30. The theme will be "The Little Things of the Kingdom." Text, "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much which is great. PRATHER HALL

If Naomi and her husband had been satisfied with Bethlehem and had not gone to Moab there to feed them during the famine in their own country, Naomi would not have come down into Moab an idolatrous nation, and our land would not have let them pass through their country when they encouraged up from Egypt, and because of it, Jehovah had put a curse upon the Ammonites and Moabites.

It was a violation of the law of God for the Israelites who were not of their own nation. But when Naomi died at the end of the ten years and you start thinking things, Ruth, who found their place among the ancestors of David and our beloved Lord, we see a picture of God's boundless grace, as well as confirmation of the promise made to Abraham, that through his seed the gentiles should be blessed. You are welcome to worship with us.

BAPTIST CHURCH

R. B. Caudill, pastor

A sense of joy and gratitude fills the heart of the pastor as he types these words. Our church has been heartily stood by and things are going in a fine way. A feeling of sadness comes when he recalls that there are some few people that could be in the service and are not. We wait, this coming Sunday, at church.

As there was a request in the last issue now amounts to $1256.90, thirteen hundred seventy six dollars and fifty cents. We are grateful for this generous offering.

Prayer meeting still holds up wonderfully well. Want to see you there this week. Come find your place. It will do you good.

A PRAYER

Show us, O Lord, that thou will do what we have failed to do, and that we have felt and hoped and prayed for when we have been forared. Thee, if only we will obey Thee. Yea, and more than that, we can not think or dream, by Thy power working in us both to will and to do that which is well pleasing to the Father. Let not our failure of faith or lack of love bring grief to any heart. Grant us we pray, a more vivid sense of the kingdom of God and its coming triumph in the hearts of men every where, for Christ's sake. Amen.

Our church will observe the Lord's Supper at the regular morning worship service. The pastor will bring his regular Sunday evening message at the 7:30 service. We are grateful for the good attendance upon these services and hope that much good will come from them.

GOVERNMENT ASKS BIDS FOR SUPPLIES FOR CCC CAMP HERE

$150 Appropriated For CCC Camp; Report Of Treasurer Is Filed

LIVED WITHIN BUDGET

The Nicholas fiscal court lived within its budget during the 1935 fiscal year, the report of Harry Kendrick, county treasurer, submitted to the court at its meeting last Friday revealed.

For the fiscal year which ended June 30, the records show, Nicholas county spent a total of $35,602.82, of which $19,785.95 was from the road and bridge fund and $15,162.14 from the general expense fund. The remainder was paid out of funds not accounted for in disbursements from the sinking fund and miscellaneous expenditures, such as interest on bonds and contracts, made prior to the beginning of the fiscal year.

The treasurer's report showed the various accounts at the close of the 1935 fiscal year. Road fund, $1,31 60; livestock fund, $68 69; new road fund, $1,414 61; general expense fund, $1,287 27; road and bridge fund $2.09 Wesco Soda, fresh, crisp; Salt Chick Feed 100 lb. bag $2.30 Hoyle, Blue Ribbon, Sweet Cream and Scalfs; Mash 100 lb. bag $2.49 Hoyle, Blue Ribbon, Sweet Cream and Scalfs; Clothes Line 40 ft. 19c Strong, dependable cord; $3,000 which had been paid, were ordered burned by the court. Interest accumulations were $1,850 which had been paid. were also ordered burned by the court.

By a vote of 3 to 2, the court approved an appropriation of $150 for the year for the purpose of leasing land for a site for the proposed CCC camp to be established here. Magistrates Allison and Bowen opposed the appropriation, while Magistrates Reed, Booth and Gillispie approved it.

By a vote of 4 to 1, the County Attorney was instructed by the court to prosecute an appeal on behalf of the county from the decision of the Franklin circuit court in the settlement of J. Clarke Lee's special bank collector's bond.

County Judge D. M. Curry reported that he had received estimates on the cost of repairing the floor in the county jail and that Sheriff John F Bugg was authorized to advertise for bids for the work.

Judge Curry was empowered and directed to enter into a contract with relief officials for the painting of the court house.

Dockets on projects, the estimated cost of which is approximately $500,000, were sent to Washington on Wednesday, Commissioner Curry said, a request that they be transferred for continuance under the new relief program. New projects will be sent in later, he said
