Artificial Heart, Lungs Invented By Lindbergh

Dr. Charles A. Lindbergh, Harvard scientist, has made a great step toward heart and lung transplantation. He has developed a mechanical heart and lung which will function for a period of 24 hours in a dog. The device is made of metal and rubber and is connected to the animal's heart and lungs by means of tubes. Lindbergh says that the device is a step toward the development of a mechanical heart and lung for use in human beings. He says that the device is a step toward the development of a mechanical heart and lung for use in human beings.
