ELEGY FOR SUMMER

(Daniel Whitehead Hicky)
How shall I bear again the Summer's going—
The morning-glories at the gates of Dawn,
Broad meadows with a thousand daisies blowing—
How can I wake and find the Summer gone?

I have loved long and passionately these hours,
Gold sunlight on the wings of butterflies
Bending the arrogant heads of waside flowers;
These eager robins and their welcome cries.

And I have loved these rocks where water crashes
Like silver cymbals through the lengthening day,
Sweet-scented fern banks where a child reposes
With every sudden lifting of the spray.

These trees have brought me quietude; and here
Long have I dreamed beneath their breaths that spread
Like jade cathedrals, tier on towering tier—
Here have I dreamed. And I was comforted.

So loving Summer and her wood ways,
Her wildflowers tossing like a flaming fire,
Bright streams where every willow's shadow plays—
How shall I ever say to her, Farewell?

PRATHER HALL

The heart of man is natures, of all natures, closest to the gospel and spiritual truths. The opening of the heart of man to the truth of God demands a Divine and supernatural power. Only the Lord can touch the heart of the unrepenerate and make them responsive to the word of the Lord.

The call of Paul and his associates to come over into Macedonia to help them, had come from a man, but no one could be found who was anxious to help. However, they made good use of every opportunity and spoke to some women who had gathered by the riverside for prayer and worship. Lydia was from the very country where Paul wanted to go to preach, but was forbidden by the Holy Spirit to do so and it is quite evident that the Lord used this devout woman and her household, who had become proselytes to the Jewish religion, and worshiped God, to spread the gospel in that country more effectively than Paul could have ever done.

BAPTIST CHURCH
R. B. Coury, minister.

Bible study and training minister on next Sunday, Rev. T. Howard Wallace, pastor of the Paris Baptist church. Sermon subject, "Christ and the Church." The pastor will be in charge of the services for the next two weeks, but will be away on one Sunday only. We have had splendid crowds and it is hoped that next Sunday will be no exception.

Wanted—Fifty more Baptists who are not in Sunday school every Sunday. We need you and you need us. Come and we will try to help you to reach our goals? Sixty-one in Baptist Training Union Sunday night. Fine!

We invite to our services all who want to find a church home and help Him to become more real, those who are groping blindly, those who don't care, in fact all who need Christ and we will try to lead you to the feet of Jesus of Nazareth, in whom you can find abundant life.
