Horsehoeing To Become Lost Art In 15 Years

Fifty brawny, but aging, representatives of the vanishing race of blacksmiths decided in convention at Columbus, Ohio, Friday, that a lot of horses will be going unshod within the next 15 years unless some young men take up the trade pretty soon.

Only remaining members of the Ohio State Association of Master Horseshoers, Blacksmiths & Welders, an organization which numbers 1,200 in the state at the best of years ago, they bemoaned the fact that their average age is more than 60 years meant an early dwindling of the ranks just when business was becoming "the best in years."

"Unfortunately there are no young men who want to learn the trade," declared Tinsley Ewing, Cleveland, association secretary.

"At the same time, business is the best it has been in years. Racing an increased interest in riding and an upswing in the use of horses on farms have brought the demand for horseshoers again. Who will do the work when we can't anymore I just don't know."

James G. Ray, Columbus, convention secretary and former president of the National Association of Horseshoers, Blacksmiths & Welders, said:

"There will be a demand for horseshoers for many years to come, and in 15 years I wonder where they are to be found there will be a scarcity of men to take up the trade.

"Already the shortage that seems bound to come, a young man with a knack for working with horses can demand a big salary. The pay has more than doubled, in fact, in the past few years."

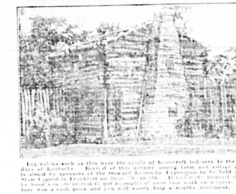
Development of Statewide Homecraft Industries Aimed



Ten schools such as this near the middle of Kentucky will serve as the centers for the development of Homecraft Industries throughout the state, if plans of the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs are carried out. The federation has launched a statewide program of Homecraft Industries, and has selected certain schools in each county as centers for the development of the industries in that county. Mrs. Ben Kilgore, president of the federation, is shown at the left, and Mrs. Ben Johnson, president of the Kentucky Homecraft Industries, is at the right.

That Kentucky may develop handmade articles in rural homes, raise a standard of quality to be maintained in all articles made, and find a profitable home market for Kentucky-made articles, the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs has launched a statewide program of Homecraft Industries. The first step in organizing industries, which will be carried on in the homes of the Kentucky mountains, is to establish a Homecraft Industries school in each county. Mrs. Ben Kilgore, president of the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs, has selected certain schools in each county as centers for the development of the Homecraft Industries in that county. Mrs. Ben Johnson, president of the Kentucky Homecraft Industries, is shown at the right.

Mrs. Kilgore said: "Kentucky has a wealth of natural resources, and it is of especial importance that we develop industries that will promote industrial and child health and the conservation of our natural resources.

"Therefore as Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, I, A. B. Chandler, do hereby proclaim the week beginning the first of May, 1936, as 'Child Health Day,' and do urge all citizens, both public and private, concerned with the health and welfare of children, on this day to study the plans for Federal, State and local co-operation for child health and security of children in accordance with the Social Security Act, which these plans have so far been worked out, and to make every possible arrangement for carrying their knowledge into action in every part of every county in the Commonwealth.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the Commonwealth of Kentucky to be affixed at the City of Frankfort this twenty-fourth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand Nine Hundred and Thirty-six, and in the one hundred and fifty-fourth year of the Commonwealth.

LET'S SAVE THE FACTS

The following article in the April issue of the Southern Textile Bulletin is worth quoting and contains food for thought. It says:

The more that tobacco farmers study tobacco statistics the more they are convinced of the facts. They find that production is steadily increasing and that prices are just as steadily dropping.

For instance, the 1935 sales were the greatest on record, bringing an average in all belts, of $20.31 per hundred pounds. During 1935 the farmers raised only 26,115,821 pounds, for which they received an average of $20.41.

And the question arises, says the Tobacco Leaf, "If such a comparatively small increase, 15,721,179 pounds, in one season, will bring such a slump in prices, what will a spree of production do for prices?" Now that the AAA has gone, who will control production?

And that's the question that is worrying the growers. A joint in the tobacco growing belts and the state and national officials are trying to lend their aid. But all efforts run into the fact that there is no way to control or to reduce production.

Mr. Moody's agreed that the only way to build up prices is to reduce production. But the individual wants to cut his acreage and poundage unless all the other people do the same. Then prices are good, they break their necks to plow and plant more acres, figuring only that more pounds mean more of the big dollars. It's hard to convince them that more pounds mean less dollars, but more work and expense.

THE LAND OF STORY-BOOKS

(Robert Louis Stevenson)

At evening when the lamp is lit,
Around the fire my parents sit;
They sit at home and talk and sing
And do not play at anything.

Now, with my little gun, I crawl
All in the dark along the wall,
And follow round the forest tracks
Away behind the sofa backs.

There, in the night, where none observe,
All in my hunter's camp I lie,
And play at nothing with intent
Till it is time to go to bed.

These are the hills, these are the woods,
These are my starry solitudes;
And there the river by whose brink
The roaring lions come to drink.

I see the others far away
As if in another country they lay,
And I, like to an Indian scout,
Around their party prowl about.

So when my nurse comes in for me
Home I return across the sea,
And go to bed with backward looks
At my dear land of Story-books.
