HAUPTMANN LAWYER QUITS

Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York criminal lawyer who entered the Hauptmann case several days before with the avowed intention of getting Hauptmann "to tell the truth," withdrew from the case last Wednesday. Announcement that he withdrawal came after he had questioned Hauptmann for more than four hours in the death house at Trenton. His retirement is taken to mean he believes the doomed man guilty. The week of March 30 has been set as the new date for the execution of the German carpenter convicted of the kidnaping and murder of the Lindbergh baby.

Scientific studies of criminals show that a desire for expensive clothes is a common motive.
