BARKING

WHOSE SPOKESMAN?

(Courier-Journal)

In his attack on the Roosevelt administration at the Liberty League dinner Saturday night, for which it is certain he does not, it is important to consider that question in weighing the value of his remarks.

The speaker himself offered an answer to that question in three words.

"I represent no group, no man, and I speak for no man or no group, but I do ask for what I believe to be the best interests of the great rank and file of the American people in which I class I belong.

Yet, when he said that, he was speaking as the chief spokesman of the Liberty League, which is more than as their spokesman from all its members and sympathizers can be. Nobody willfer he pleaded his words. It will be impossible to convince the country that he represented, as he claimed "the great mass of Democrats" and for while he may have belonged to that mass, he is asserted, on days gone by it was palpable that on Saturday night he represented only a particular group of the people to which he now belongs.

That group is the Liberty League, an organization, not of the American people, but of those men whose interests at best are served by liberal turn from the reputationists seeking to destroy the President's work for the whole people and to hark the old era of exploitation and injustice. The Liberty League was created by the masters of corporate wealth and is maintained by them in a systematic, persistent and well-financed campaign to break down the New Deal. That is the group to which Al Smith now belongs and for which he spoke Saturday night, and not the "great rank and file of the American people."

And it is not to be forgotten that the Liberty League is backed by men whose desire is to exploit the great rank and file of the American people. Whether Mr. Smith may have once belonged to that group, but whom even now he does not represent when he makes such speeches as that of Saturday night. This should be borne in mind when undertaking to evaluate the charges and arguments he put forth in that effort.

Wool-Pulling Charges Bring Jail Sentences

Four boys, accused of pulling wool from sheep on the farm of John Simpson, Harrodsburg road, in Jessamine county, were sentenced to 90 days in jail each Saturday when they were tried before County Judge T. R. Guyn, of Nicholasville. Another boy, tried on the same charge, was released after he was given a big dose of castor oil. Getting 90 days were George Parker, William Parker, Vernon Martin and "Buzz" Watts. Getting castor oil was Robert Parker, the youngest a lad of 12 years.

New Grain Aids Cattle Feeders

Oats, Wheat, Barley, Corn, in Combinations Show Good Results.

By E. T. Robbins, Animal Husbandry Specialist, College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

Combinations of the various small grains recently threshed on Illinois farms are being used to good advantage by cattle feeders to carry their fattening stock until the new corn crop becomes available. With favorable weather results in prospect, cattle are able to keep the animals gaining as rapidly as possible and then put on the finish with the new corn this fall.

Among the combinations showing good results are oats and wheat, oats, wheat and barley, or oats, wheat and corn where corn is available. These grain rations, along with good protein and legume hay, so plentiful in the state this year, have produced good gains and furnish a fairly economical way of keeping cattle gaining until new corn is available.

Some operators are buying corn to feed with the small grains on which they started in the spring. In cases where cattle fed in this manner have been sold, they have paid a good return for the labor and risk of corn involved in the venture.

Cattle feeders are also making plans to conserve all the roughage available for next winter's feeding. Where it has been found that roughage is an economical feed for wintering cattle on the natural pasture in grain rations where the animals are being fattened for market.

The silo is expected to be the most popular way of preserving the green fodder and corn stover as well as many other types of roughage. Legume hays are especially suitable, since they may be preserved at a relatively small cost to take care of the extra amount of roughage crops expected this year.

Apple Pomace Good Cow Feed, Tests Indicate

Large and dependable supplies of apples are grown and pressed in the commercial orchards of Illinois. But little use has been made of the pressed pomace, which has been allowed to accumulate in huge heaps outside the building housing the cider mill.

Tests have now proved that apple pomace was evaporated, worthless, or even dangerous as a feed for live stock. Consequently, most of these pressed apples are allowed to decay or were hauled away as refuse. The pomace is highly palatable, and if animals were allowed free access to it they would eat enough of it to cause them to founder or bloat.

Several experiment station tests have now shown by feeding comparisons that silage made from apple pomace is worth the same feeding value as corn silage.

Pomace stored in drums or barrels for two or three months before opening lose only a very small amount through surface spoilage. Otherwise it keeps in perfect condition. Even after an apparently harmless discoloration has appeared, the pomace underneath and the iron walls of the containers is in fine condition and can be used in much the same way and to the same extent as corn silage.

Low-Cutting Corn Sled

Some farmers who have corn stalks but not plant enough acreage in corn to justify purchasing a corn binder. In such instances corn-cutting with the old-fashioned hand knife is a slow and tiresome job. But the Sun has come to the rescue of such farmers in the form of a corn-cutting sled which costs little to build, cuts two rows at a time and will help two men and a horse cut as much in a day as seven men can cut by hand. It cuts as low as seven pound that little corn is left in the field. Two men may hide and saves from 1,500 to 2,000 pounds more fodder to the acre.

Removing Horns

Dehorning has been very little hollow space. When dried or dead the tissue can be easily removed leaving the hollow outer shell. On the contrary, the horn tissue of live animals is living tissue, and will bleed if cut sufficiently deep to give circulation near the tip. Some may cut the horn high enough to sever the horn in a large mass; actually it decreases bleeding and saves time. Cut the horn close to the head taking a thin ring of skin all the way around.

Farm Water Systems

Using gas that is small in size of the commonest mistakes in farm water systems, says A. G. Tyler, agricultural engineer, Minnesota University Farm. Ordinarily, one-inch pipe is the smallest that should be used. Small pipe cuts down the pressure tremendously between the pressure tank and the point of delivery.

Value of Proved Sires

As all dairymen know, it is not difficult to find a registered bull that will materially increase the productive capacity of the herd. Unlike that of their dams, so long as the latter do not produce more than 250 pounds of butterfat a year. But when a herd of cows has been developed to the point where their average yearly production reaches 400 pounds, the feeding of a bull that is proved to be even maintain that production is a real problem.—Wallaces' Farmer.

League Officials Approve New Film

NEWSPAPER MISTAKES

Lehigh Independent Argus: Errors in newspapers are frequent, though it is the goal of the staff to all it's power to be journalists to eradicate the disease of mistakes. Editorial in the Cedar Falls Iowa Record, published some time ago: "Some of the mistakes and goofs, some advice which could be read over a little time and profit by in a while, both by newspaper folk and subscribers.

"The newspaper reader must realize that apple pomace was evaporated, worthless, or even dangerous as a feed for live stock. Consequently, most of these pressed apples are allowed to decay or were hauled away as refuse. MORNING IN WINTER

(Leona Ames Hill)

I walked through a pine wood in the cold dawn
Of a still winter day when slow
flakes fell
Unbidden by men's feet, Only the fawn
And the sable-mottled doe disturbed the shell
Of whiteness and of silence as they stirred
With delicate feet, their eyes aroused, remote,
Until, frightened, they suddenly turned and fled
That in a land where lately snow had lain
White plum would bloom and robins cry for rain.

WHY EVERY CHILD SHOULD HAVE A MUSICAL TRAINING

(By C. L. Smith)

We very naturally expect any form of education, if properly pursued, to confer certain benefits upon our children. Let us consider how musical training may benefit its recipient in the following desirable directions: mentally, physically, morally, socially and financially.

Morally: A musical training develops a keen appreciation of the beautiful. It encourages him to wish to do beautiful things and thus his own character becomes a thing of beauty. He gains inspiration from the histories of the great masters, most of whom were strikingly clean men. In his hours of leisure, instead of questionable amusements, he frequents recitals and concerts and seeks the society of persons whose influence is uplifting rather than degrading. Music is generally known as the art without a vice.

Mentally: In our public schools certain subjects are given solely to develop the processes of the mind—mental gymnastics. There is no subject which will develop the memory of things heard with precision and accuracy as music. Then in addition, it causes cooperation of mind and muscle, teaching the pupil to think and act at the same time. It also teaches him to recognize that beautiful music which is really true, that which is spurious. The study of musical form develops his sense of balance and symmetry. Von Lubich said, "Without music man is a beast."

Physically: For a child attending the public schools, music is a pleasant relaxation from his other class studies. It develops grace and delicacy of muscular movements and teaches the child a sense of rhythm and grace in thought and physical life.

Socially: No gathering is complete without music. It is the music that sings or plays well who is in demand in refined society. His invitations are numerous enough so that he can pick and choose where he shall go and what he shall do. Also, he is the one who can converse intelligently upon musical subjects in all ways at ease among cultured people.

Financially: The ability to sing or play often makes it possible for one to gain entrance into persons whom it is highly desirable to know for social reasons and who might otherwise be inaccessible. Or, if one cares to follow music as a profession, there have never before been such opportunities as at the present time. Public schools are giving more and more importance to music and calling for teachers at good salaries. There is also a great increasing demand for teachers in conservatories and private studios. Or, if one prefers to perform in public, he has no difficulty in obtaining a lucrative position either on the concert stage, in the theatre or in the church. Even commercial houses selling musical instruments are placing musicians as department heads. Never in the history of these United States has a musical training been a "dollar and cents" value.

The foregoing has not attempted to tell anything that is new and startling. It merely states a few self evident facts which can easily be proven to be true by anyone who will observe the person who has had a musical training as compared to the one who has not.—The Etude.

Exciting movies cause colds, according to Dr. William Ibbotson, noted English ear, nose and throat surgeon.
