LILACS

(Charles Hanson Towne)

Now, with the first sweet breath of spring,
The lilacs sway, the lilacs sing.
And in the moonlight,
The lilacs lovely beautiful,
I swear I hear the lilacs sing.

Here, where the April trumpets blow,
And the world is white with flowering snow,
In the cool sunlight,
The passionate sunlight,
The lilacs nod, and whisper—so,
I swear I hear the lilacs sing.

In the slow rush of the April rain,
In the blue darkness,
The sudden fragrance,
The lilacs are ghosts come back again,
I swear I hear the lilacs sing.

Then, with the first, wild wind of spring,
When the world is mad with blossoming,
In the pale moonlight,
The haunted moonlight,
I swear I hear the lilacs sing.
