

Condemns Severe Pruning Of Trees

The mutilation of beautiful shade trees, done on the theory that pruning every year is necessary, is condemned in an editorial by Prof. N. E. Elliott, landscape specialist at the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture. Most trees do not need to be pruned, and the severe, following on other trees, has been found to be a waste of money. The practice consists of cutting back all branches, often leaving stumps 2 to 6 inches in diameter, to be cut to a level just above the ground. These will soon die and the results of such treatment are never superior. Home owners should stop and realize that it takes years to grow beautiful trees that can be permanently injured in a few years by pruners who misuse the effectiveness of their work by the amount of limbs they remove.
