Don't Be Misled--
By cheap Turkey Feed at 15 to 20 cents a hundred less. Turkeys fed Red Comb Turkey Grower will bring 2 to 3 cents more than those fed cheaper feeds.

As the turkey becomes a more year round bird for the consumer, the plumpness of body conformation, juiciness and flavor of meat, places Red Comb finished birds at the top of the list. It gives the birds width and length of breast development. Many turkey growers make the serious mistake of limited feeding during the range growing period, resulting in late maturity and poorly finished birds.

Red Comb's many years of leadership in the production of superior market quality in poultry and eggs shows up to the mutual satisfaction of both grower and consumer of Red Comb quality turkeys.

AS ENGLISH IS

(Josh Y. Shaw)

I've never been able to understand
Just why some will mix rhyme with hand.
And then I think of mother and father
As different in sound as rather and father.
And harsh and lush, and do and how
Sound so farther than cow and how.
And when I pronounce laughter and daughter
I'm muddled the same as in later and water.
There's wasp and gasp, and there's the word bony.
Yet irony don't spell irony.
And why must we put an "s" in touch,
When it isn't needed in such or much?
And why are "e" and "i" in niece,
When a double "e" serves well in geese?
Then, how come words like two, too, to,
Are so, one and do, doe, dew,
And words like comb and tomb and bomb
Have and rave and pave and have?
I'll leave to our good old King James
Such conundrums.
