A Cincinnati traveling man several weeks ago bought a sack of White Rose. Next time he was around he bought three sacks. On the last trip he took five sacks and said he expected next trip to fill up his car.

He said he and his friends up there could not get any flour like White Rose and that they were "wild" about it.

There's a moral here for home folk.

READY FOR THE LILACS
(Baltimore Sun)

Ready for the lilacs,
Everything is set;
Covers off the boxwood
And the mignonette;
Robins here to utter
In every song they sing
The true note of returning spring
That brings the breath of spring!

Down the garden borders,
Down them row by row,
A stirring as if beauty
Were burning how to grow;
In the grass, the mosses,
The weeds beside the gate,
A touch of that strange fever,
That wears an April date!

Hylas in the marshes,
Blue joys in the tree;
Ripple of the magic sun
On the face of sea;
Ready for the lilacs,
And it won't be long—
But my heart, with wonder
Of the April song!
