Rubbing a dog's ears always with a piece of cloth will make it walk easier than usual.

Kill a spider and it comes with a shower; if it comes listening around your house, it means you're carrying and you may know that the neighbors are gossiping about.

If you see a star fall, expect a death in the family.

If a girl goes to a spring that she has never visited before and puts a rock from the spring into the hem of her dress, she will marry the first boy that she cross water with.

If a briar catches in your skirt, the young lady at the corner will soon love you.

When you see a shooting star, if you say "money" three times you will have a full pocketbook.

After finishing a new quilt, if four young ladies take each of the four corners and shake a cat in it, they will be married by the first of next January.

To cure thrush in a baby's mouth, have the seventh boy in any family to blow nine times in the baby's mouth.

To stop shingles, take a black chicken, wring its head off and paint a circle around the body just below the shingles with the blood.

To cure ear-ache, boil on the ground three times at the cry of the first whip-poor-will.

To cure ear-ache, get a bess bug, pinch it in half and let the drop of blood fall into the patient's ear then plug with cotton.

Fourteen years ago Joseph H. Sears of Oyster Bay, L. I., hired a chef who gave his name as Albert Stevens, and who served faithfully until his health failed last year. He had never left the estate; never had any callers nor received any mail. When death came a few days ago it was discovered that "Alfred" was a woman.

THE WAY
Someone's joys are greater,
Someone's bothers less,
Though any that we ever seem to know—
Perhaps, we will be humble and confess
The way we feel about the way things go.
And yet, when we hold fast
To Faith's blithe trail,
The good that we deserve will never fail
To come—and always,
Does the good prevail!
