Milk Production Large, Declining Seasonally

Milk production for this time of year is the largest on record but is declining seasonally. It was reported by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. Factories and tors are the abundant feed supplies at low prices which compared with last year.

The Bureau said that features of manufactured dairy products include heavy production, a relatively low level of consumption, and the accumulation of large storage stocks. A 7 per cent increase in milk production this September 1 compared with last was reported.

The September 1 figure on milk production set a new high record for this time of year. Production of manufactured dairy products in July (latest available information) was 8 per cent larger than in July a year ago, and was a new high record for that month.

But the apparent consumption of manufactured dairy products was somewhat less this July than in 1937, the Bureau said. July consumption of fluid milk and cream, as indicated by receipts at the principal eastern markets, also was less than in July 1937.

Storage stocks of manufactured dairy products increased rapidly this season, reached new high figures on September 1. The supply situation as to production and storage stocks is considered by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics in the report during the government fed relief distribution.

"Recession" Renders Public Service.

Even "recessions" have silver linings occasionally. The one from which the country seems to be currently emerging should lay bare to the public gaze one gravy fact, namely the rising expenditures of the federal government.

Until recently record tax receipts tended to narrow the spread between income and outgo, creating an illusion of decreased expenditures. For example, fiscal 1938 showed a federal deficit of only about a billion and a half dollars, with a record deficit of nearly four and a half billions in 1936, which many persons believe that the bureaucrats were busily preparing some of this economies that they constantly preach—all of which was just so much hot air.

Expenditures have risen steadily over the past three and four years. Today the regular annual budget of the federal government is around the $9,000,000,000 mark. What the recession with its consequent falling off of revenue, together with new "emergency" outlays of all kinds, is estimated set for 1939 of at least $4,000,000,000. By the end of this fiscal year the federal debt will touch another of its periodical "all time highs" of more than $40,000,000,000.

The "experts" differ as to just how big a debt burden the country can stand without suffering a decided collapse. But most of them agree on two scores. It is doubtful whether expenditures by government can survive national bankruptcy, and the public debt is nearing the danger point.

Rays Of Light.

A headline in a metropolitan newspaper a few days ago caught our eyes for its very singularity. That is, it was singularly outstanding in view of the rate of business war correspondents have been doing lately.

We have become so accustomed to reading of the numerous slain in foreign battle, the multitudes wounded or starving, the buildings bombed, and the like that, in our perusal of newspapers, we often skip over the articles which might have cause to uplift our outlook.

We were struck by the headline which says No Force Can Destroy God" and its sub-head, "Declares There Can Be No Prosperity Without Religion and Morality." The article was written by Archbishop Amleto Cicognani, the International News Service, a Hearst syndicate. The occasion was the Nation's Eucharistic Congress meeting in New Orleans.

In the past few years we have heard much talk of the business and governments being operated entirely on their own bases, without any sort of religious principles or morals. Many of them do. Others don't. This pian was attempted, even to the extent of the establishment of churches and buildings of religious orders.

In other sections the church as a whole has not been deliberately destroyed, but, simply and emphatically, the ostracizing of one religious pursuit and its followers has been. As a direct result, nations have, in many cases, benefitted considerably from the wisdom and knowledge brought to them by those persons who have become political refugees from their own lands.

But all the while, ministers throughout the country have been preaching that there must of necessity be a "return to religion." It is not our opinion that they were referring in all cases to our own people, nor, in any case, to all of our people, but, simply to those who needed such advice.

However, in the face of such alarming facts as those brought forth by current wars, wherein human beings seem as bestial as the lion which tortures its animal comrades of the jungle, we do honor of the article and public figures as the President of the United States and the Postmaster General make such statements as they recently did.

Mr. Farley stated that "the father of this country was wise enough to foresee that those religious who seek to drive God out of their lives '. . . are Frankensteins that will bring on their own destruction and the destruction of their people."

The final paragraph of the President's message was worded thus: "I have said and I repeat to this benighted world: not find a happy solution if approached in the spirit of the Sermon on the Mount."
