Wildlife Exhibit To Be Shown At State Fair

Frankfort, Ky., September 7—The wildlife exhibit sponsored by the Division of Game and Fish will be displayed at the Kentucky State Fair, Louisville, Ky., September 12-17.

The exhibit has been showing at county fairs over the state for the past month and has been the outstanding public interest by visitors to the fairs.

The Game and Fish display contains a deer head, Wood Duck, native Chinese pheasants in two forms, ruffed grouse, the carcasses of quail, three coveys, one-week old, chicks, eared snake, a bantam hen one entire week, 11-weeks old birds, and the third cycle containing birds representing the different periods of growth and the mature birds in full plumage in just about the size of a possum.

Game and Fish has taken in the hatching and rearing of the birds at the state of Kentucky.

The exhibit also contains a large number of stuffed animals such as foxes, rabbits, geese, ducks, quail and numerous other species of the feathered and furbish variety.

Mr. Frank Phipps, Superintendent of Hatcheries for the Division of Game and Fish, will be in charge of the exhibit.

Percentage of Fat in Nuts

Most nuts are extremely rich in fat. The pecan contains over 70 per cent of fat; the brazil nut, hickory nut, and English walnut, over 60 per cent; almond and pistache, over 50 per cent, and the cashew and peanut over 40 per cent.

Brain Size of Pinhead

Butterfly brains contain 40,000 nerves and 80,000 airtubes, yet the brain is just about the size of a pinhead.

JONATHAN: COURAGEOUS FRIENDSHIP

LESSON TEXT—I Samuel 20:4-17.
GOLDEN TEXT—A friend loveth at all times.—Proverbs 17:17.
REFERENCE MATERIAL—Acts 7:55-60.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Some Things Friends Do.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Some Things Friends Do.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Friendship of Jonathan and David.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The God of Jonah a Friend.

Without question, the most precious possession any man or woman has (apart from his fellowship with God if he is a Christian, and the love of his own family) is friendship. It is the finest fruit blossom by the side of the rugged pathway of life. Like many flowers, some friendships need to be cultivated and encouraged.

It has been said that the love of a woman for another woman is a beautiful thing, the love of a man for a woman an even more devoted and glorious thing, but that the bond of love between man and man surpasses all in its strength and glory. Some might question such a statement, and yet it is true that between man and man there is the possibility of the highest type of friendship. David and Jonathan stand up the bold of an inspiring list of men who loved each other with their whole souls.

The lesson for today calls for a careful reading of the incidents in the life of Jonathan and David recorded in I Samuel, chapters 14, 18, 19, and 20, as well as the first chapter of II Samuel. It is a story which will richly reward a careful reading. Considering the printed portion in the light of this background we note six things that characterized this great friendship.

I. Cultivated (v. 4).

Friendships must be "kept in repair." Foolish and almost wicked is that man who by boorishly offending his fellowmen, or by neglecting the thoughtful words and acts that cultivate friendship, drives men away from him. "He that hath friends must show himself friendly" (Prov. 18:24). Consider the admonition of our Lord in Luke 16:8, 9, where he urges the rightful use of even our worldly possessions to cultivate eternal friendships. Read what Jonathan did in I Sam. 18:3-5, only one of his many loving and thoughtful acts.

II. Courteous (v. 5).

David asked that Jonathan deal kindly with him, and the entire story reveals that he did just that, always. More friendships are wrecked on the rocks of little discourtesies than in almost any other way.

We live in an age which affects an outward veneer of culture, which is at heart often thoughtless and unkind. Let Christian men and women be courteous. They should be as followers of the gentle Jesus, and it will bring them countless friends.

III. Candid (v. 9).

Friendships that last must be built on absolute candor, not the kind that delights in telling an unpleasant truth, but one which speaks the truth in love. Jonathan told David the truth.

IV. Courageous (vv. 12, 13).

Jonathan was such a faithful son that when the time of parting came he stayed with his wicked father rather than go with David, whom he loved. But he was true to David even though he knew it would incur the wrath of his father if that friendship became known.

Things that cost us nothing are usually "worth it." Real friendship calls for sacrifice, standing by in the night hours, sharing burdens, loyal even though others may condemn us for it.

V. Covenant Keeping (vv. 16, 17).

Covenants entered into by solemn treaties in our time are soon discarded as "scraps of paper." People make promises to one another that they never intend to fulfill. Jonathan and David made a covenant and kept it. True friends do not violate their loving agreements.

This matter of trickery and falsehood in life and business is one that deeply troubles the writer of these notes. He sees unmistakable evidence that this perverse spirit has come into the precincts of the church itself. We should have a revival of honesty in office, home, state, and church.

VI. Complete (v. 17).

"He loved him as he loved his own soul"—such a friend was Jonathan. His devotion to David had no qualifying "strings" on it. He was not seeking something for himself. The closest he came to that was to bring his children into the covenant with David (v. 15), and who could question the propriety of such devotion between true friends? He saw that David was to supplant Saul as king, and in the face of his own interest as Saul's son, he put David forward.

Friendship is akin to our relationship to God in that it calls for a complete giving of ourselves, if we are to be true friends. This does not mean that individuality is lost, or special interests and abilities destroyed, but it does mean a wholesouled desire for our friend's welfare, and a complete devotion of our all to his good.

Unfortunately, you have to cut down on the things you enjoy if you are to save money.

THE GARDEN

WINTER PREPARATION

By John S. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture

September is by no means a winter month, but it is the month in which preparation is made for the garden to pass the winter in comfort. Whether gardens actually can live is doubtful, but certain it is that they could speak, many of them would protest to high heaven the loss of plant food, and of garden soil itself, they sustain by reason of winter downpours of rain and snow.

The best way for a garden to pass the winter is under a growing crop for, thus covered, there is saving of soluble fertility is conserved instead of flowing away, also that to virtue of the mutual roots of the cover crop to bring the soil together so it will take that element in from air, such the nitrogen. Fortunately, in this section there are many crops that can be planted late and yet make considerable growth before frost. Rye, wheat, oats, barley, vetch, crimson clover, and Austrian winter peas are among the most commonly used cover crops. Rye makes the most growth, but crimson clover is the most valuable legume for winter cover crop purposes. Hairy vetch and Austrian winter peas also are valuable legumes. Rye, wheat, oats, barley, vetch, crimson clover, and Austrian winter peas are among the most commonly used cover crops. Rye makes the most growth, but crimson clover is the most valuable legume for winter cover crop purposes. Hairy vetch and Austrian winter peas also are valuable legumes.

Most commonly used cover crops are the small grains, rye, wheat and barley. Of these, the first two are more generally used because they are adapted throughout the state, whereas barley, though better, because of its finer, softer straw, can be depended upon to survive severe winters in the southern two-fifths of the state.

The small grains furnish no plant food beyond that they have saved and stored within themselves. There are several legumes that may be used with them to manufacture new nitrogen, taken from the air. These are hairy vetch and crimson clover. Vetch is dependable to withstand the winter's rigors anywhere in Kentucky, but crimson clover's survival is not certain, except in the southern two-fifths of the state.

Seeding rates are as follows: Small grains alone, 2 bushels per acre; in combination with legume, small grains, 1 1-2 bushels, hairy vetch, 25 pounds, or crimson clover, 12 pounds. Alone, small grains may be sown as late as October 15, but the combination, only during September, and in the northern counties not much after September 15.

Home gardeners seldom have a whole acre to sow at one time. In fact, their program should be to sow intermittently—plots and rows as they become available. A good plan is to estimate the total to be sown, procure the seed, and sow it at the rate of 1 pound to 80 square feet. The fall greens may be sown with the cover crop to take no harm to either. Soil preparation is not critical. All that need be done is to chop in the vegetable tops and the weeds, with a hoe or a mattock, and level with a rake.

Even though only half the garden is sown to cover crop, that much is gained, and the stable manure contemplated to cover the whole garden, may be spread over the unsown portion. Better, is to segregate the "warm" crops in a "late garden," using the stable manure there, to make it the "early" garden of next year. The early or "rear" part of the garden offers opportunity for sowing a crop which will be retained to make maximum growth before it must be broken to receive the late or "warm" vegetables of the next year.

The point is to sow something for turning under, to take the place of a manure crop, and in a stable manner. Commercial vegetable growers respect the part cover crops play in this business. Home gardeners may well learn from them.

Many Entries In State Fair Horse Show And Dog Show

The heaviest demand for premium lists and blanks and reserved seat tickets received to date for the Kentucky State Fair Horse Show, to be held at the Kentucky State Fair Grounds, Louisville, Monday, September 12, through Saturday night, September 17, indicates that the show will be the most successful in the history of the Fair. This event consists of four nights of horse shows, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday, and the grand championship exhibition Wednesday night. This attraction has become nationally known and will be held in the Horse Show Building. The attraction has likewise materially increased in size, and will be divided into the following groups: Five gaited, three gaited, fine harness, Kentucky saddle, three gaited, combination harness and saddle, walking horse, and the Kentucky Derby Champion Stakes. The Derby Champion Stakes will be held on the Saturday night program. Entries close Monday, September 12, and the show will be held in the Horse Show Building. In the past the available space for show exhibitors and the grand stand was filled to capacity, and in the larger quarters, there will be a greater seating capacity. Premium lists for the show will be released at once.

Dog shows will be held on Tuesday and Friday.

The Louisville Kennel Club's 28th annual dog show will be held at this time. Judging will start at 9 a. m. Due to many entries this show has outgrown the Dog Show Building and
