Italian Rye Grass

Seedmen tell us they are selling thousands of bushels of Italian Rye Grass throughout Kentucky.

This is a prolific winter grass. It germinates quickly, ensuring an early coverage, and affords abundant fall and winter pasturage. It is a cool-season and lushly like orchard grass, but has more of the appearance of blue grass, and is related by all kinds of live stock.

Many county agents are recommending that it be sown now in Lepezoea clover fields. When the Lepezoea dies away the eye grass will be up and ready for coverage and grazing on that field throughout the winter.

Next spring when the Lepezoea comes back, the eye grass will have dropped its seed, and its dormant until fall, when it will re-seed and cover the bare Lepezoea field again.

It sounds good to us and we believe it is worth your consideration.
