Back In The Harness.

After an absence of six months the writer returns to the staff of The Mercury. After having been news editor of the paper for more than eighteen years, it was not easy to lay down this work last summer and we are happy, indeed, to return to the Mercury family and resume the work in which we have spent most of the years of our life.

The many kind expressions of friends during the past week has added much to the pleasure of our return. We shall at all times endeavor to merit the confidence of those friends in striving to keep The Mercury what it has always been—a welcome visitor in every home to which it goes.

We believe that few other hebts offer as great opportunity for friendship as the editorship of a country newspaper. It is the weekly newspaper when churches lose sorrows and your joys, and one cannot but become vitally interested in the happiness and welfare of the citizens of the community.

And so we bespeak the same fine spirit of loyalty and patronage which hundreds of citizens have accorded The Mercury throughout its almost three-fourths of a century of existence.

Nuisance Abated.

Through the combined efforts of the Carlisle city council and the Carlisle Business Men's Club the community has been almost completely freed of itinerant peddlers, agents and street hawkers.

Several months ago, at the instance of a group of business men, the council passed an ordinance requiring a license of $50 per day from all persons selling merchandise on the streets. This high license put an end to the vendors who came and went at pleasure and sold fruit and merchandise of every description from trucks.

Merchants have contended with reason that this practice was an unfair competition. The street hawkers paid no taxes to maintain the city, county, or state schools, and by the merchandise offered was of an inferior quality, priced so low it usually was no profit higher than the price charged for the same merchandise at home, yet they took advantage of the days when the largest crowds were in town, and had the further advantage of operating their business on the public square where the largest crowds assembled.

This ordinance would not prohibit the house-to-house solicitors. Accordingly, the board of directors of the Business Men's Club decided a plan under which permits would be issued to each solicitor, if the solicitor's proposition was deemed worthy. While solicitors were not prohibited from paying their trade because of inability to obtain a card, merchants and citizens were urged to demand to see the card before they would listen to the appeal. As a result, merchants and citizens were saved the annoyance of listening to unscrupulous solicitors and dollars were saved many dollars.

Symbols Of Civilization.

Early man had few possessions. His productive capacities were confined to fashioning garments of skins and implements of stone and wood. But he was blessed also with the urge that is responsible for all work. Thus the soil became his servant; the earth yielded him food and the sea and air became his helpers.

The spread of a refined piece of amber became electric power tight, communication and radio. Fingers were transformed by forks and other tools. Wild mouths became delicate fruits and vegetables. Clay became pottery and metal became tools. The rubbing stone became the wheel. Step by step, man advanced. Evolution ruled. It protects the fittest—not the brute and to the worthy of close to it for strength—but the astute, the venturesome and thankful. Man every generation has added to the heritage he received from his predecessors. Each generation has left the world a little better than it found it. Each generation has left a little more than it received.

Today we are the heirs of all the ages. We are the beneficiaries of the sacrifices and the toil of countless millions who have gone before us. We are the inheritors of the wisdom and the knowledge of the ages. We are the possessors of the greatest civilization the world has ever known.

Today we are the trustees of the future. We are the custodians of the heritage we have received. We are the builders of the civilization of tomorrow. We are the architects of the destiny of the generations to come after us.

Today we are the symbols of civilization, printing stands first and will so stand as long as civilization exists. We are happy to be able to play a small part in this the greatest of inventions.

May Change Tobacco Quota.

Efforts are almost certain to be made at the present session of Congress to change the method of determining whether quotas shall be applied to the production of tobacco.

As a result of rejection of quotas for the 1939 burley and dark fired tobacco crops in referenda among growers, Congressmen from several of the tobacco growing states have started a study of possible changes. The Kentucky delegation in the senate shall be applied to all growers only after two-thirds affected approve such restriction.

A majority but not two-thirds of the burley growers voted for the quota plan for next year. The vote by townsend all sections in 1939 production and brought from officials the pledge that no second crops next year would depress prices.

Kentucky growers approved the restriction by the necessary two-thirds majority, as in contrast to the other states opposed the plan by more than the necessary majority majority was registered by Nicholas county growers.

A number of suggestions have been made by Senators and Congressmen, and it is quite probable that some action will be taken in order to allow growers to cast a ballot on the question of whether or not they desire curtailment of the crop next season.

One In Every 400.

If you would prolong your life, go inside the house and stay inside after 4 o'clock every afternoon. Particularly, do not venture to drive your automobile between the hours of 5 and midnight, and if you are not a driver, do not cross streets between those hours. Thus you will greatly increase your chances to live until 1940, or longer, for during 1938 one in every 400 persons will be injured, one in every 400 pedestrians will be hurt, one in every 5500 motorists will be killed and one in every 8000 pedestrians will go to his grave. Half of those accidents will occur between the hours of 5 p. m. and midnight.

These figures appear from the surveys of automobile accidents made by the National Safety Council. They should be warning to every person who uses the streets or highways. Hundreds of motorist. If any reader doubts their accuracy he has only to read the figures just as end to the vendors who came and went at pleasure and sold fruit and merchandise of every description from trucks.

Merchants have contended with reason that this practice was an unfair competition. The street hawkers paid no taxes to maintain the city, county, or state schools, and by the merchandise offered was of an inferior quality, priced so low it usually was no profit higher than the price charged for the same merchandise at home, yet they took advantage of the days when the largest crowds were in town, and had the further advantage of operating their business on the public square where the largest crowds assembled.

This ordinance would not prohibit the house-to-house solicitors. Accordingly, the board of directors of the Business Men's Club decided a plan under which permits would be issued to each solicitor, if the solicitor's proposition was deemed worthy. While solicitors were not prohibited from paying their trade because of inability to obtain a card, merchants and citizens were urged to demand to see the card before they would listen to the appeal. As a result, merchants and citizens were saved the annoyance of listening to unscrupulous solicitors and dollars were saved many dollars.

Down But Not Out

The American railroads face today operating deficits. The reasons are not difficult to find. Lack of regulation. Many companies, even in the hands of receivers, and others have steadily toward bankruptcy. Yet the driving energy is typical of private enterprise at its best. The railroad management is out to carry on with outstanding virtue or in pursuit of greater operating efficiency, so that the traveling and shipper may be given still more comfortable, faster and safer transportation.

A recent announcement of the Association of American Railroads tells of the improvements to be carried on by the lines in cooperation with manufacturers in such matters as air conditioning, the causes and prevention of rails, methods of loading freight, car and engine design and service of other technical problems are on the research calendar underwriting constant attention of experts.

Certainly this is not the story of a dead industry. To the contrary, it is a story of great progress in the face of tremendous odds. Deficits or no deficits, the industry never slows in its effort to raise the standards of service—standards which have long been the highest in the world. Railway management has every reason to feel discouraged—it does not feel that it is no use in doing anything. But instead, it keeps moving forward.

No industry has done more to justify the cooperation of our lawmakers, in maintaining regulation that is fair to the public. Transportation is the nation's life blood. Any step man-fashioned. Evolution ruled. It protects the fittest—not the brute and to the worthy of close to it for strength—but the astute, the venturesome and thankful. Man every generation has added to the heritage he received from his predecessors. Each generation has left the world a little better than it found it. Each generation has left a little more than it received.

Today we are the heirs of all the ages. We are the beneficiaries of the sacrifices and the toil of countless millions who have gone before us. We are the inheritors of the wisdom and the knowledge of the ages. We are the possessors of the greatest civilization the world has ever known.

Today we are the trustees of the future. We are the custodians of the heritage we have received. We are the builders of the civilization of tomorrow. We are the architects of the destiny of the generations to come after us.

Today we are the symbols of civilization, printing stands first and will so stand as long as civilization exists. We are happy to be able to play a small part in this the greatest of inventions.

Psychology.

Psychology is a deep sounding word, and the average person hardly knows what it means. It is defined as the science of the human mind. But, profound as the subject is, yet it is a line of thought that is being studied by many unemployed people, who are anxious to find ways by which they can make good in the world.

Many people who follow little or nothing about theoretical psychology, are yet in a practical way very good psychologists themselves. A politician for instance may never have studied this science in any book, yet instinct tells him how the minds of his constituents work. Many politicians are too much swayed by every current of popular opinion that blows, as that they are not much more than mere weather vanes. But still any successful statesman has to know what the people are thinking in their inmost minds before he can sway their thoughts.

The good salesman is an expert psychologist. He knows how the mind of his customer works. He tries to adapt himself to the tendencies in the mind of his customers and how to appeal to different types of minds.

One reason why many persons fail in the field of selling is that they are so anxious to talk themselves and express their own thoughts, that they rarely listen to what the person who has it in his own mind. Every one has thoughts that are passing through the minds of the people, and is better able to predict what they will do, and what kind of argument will appeal to them.

Learning The Hard Way.

A release from the Claims Bureau of the Association of Casualty and Surety Executives points out that the average motorist is against fake accident claim rackets, in which the police and capital stock insurance companies have joined forces to protect the insuring public against heavy losses as going forward with unprecedented vigor.

This work is comparatively new—but it has resulted in the arrest and conviction of hundreds of racketeers, including members of old-established gangs who moved about from city to city and state to state perpetrating their schemes—frauds which every insurances policyholder must pay for, through higher insurance rates. As the Association says, "Accident fakers constitute one of the strangest criminal types known." The people they will injure are usually not even personal injury, to get easy money from some innocent motorist. Taxicab company, railroad, or other individual or industry." Over a period of time, the "take" from the rackets runs far into the millions.

One of the recently convicted claim racketeers, it has been found, was in the business for 15 years. Captured in Massachusetts to New Jersey, he was forever noticed caught in trolley doors, falling off broken throttles, dumbling over umbrellas in trains, and getting hit by automobile fenders. He always had witnesses ready to testify to the fact that his accident was the result of carelessness of others, and that his medicine—and ready to obtain a settlement of a few hundred dollars. He started striving a person only once, along with others of the gang, and then disappeared.

This strike against the faked claim artist is an important deterrent to others as it is in protecting the public against fakers and cowards. The accident racketeer is at last learning that "crime does not pay"—and learning it the hard way.

What's the Answer?

By EDWARD FINNEY

UNBELIEVABLE as it sounds to us today, it was once the practice of men to wipe their noses on their cuffs. One day a king, in reviewing his troops was offended at the sight and conceived the idea of sewing buttons on the sleeves of his soldiers' uniforms at the point where it was lifted to the nose. Inured the soldiers of the practice, they developed the habit of carrying those cloths about with them and the people of the kingdom took it up. Handkerchiefs were established as a hygienic necessity but the practice of buttons on the sleeves was never dropped.

THE PRESIDENT SPEAKS

(Richmond Register)

President Roosevelt's message to congress was an adroit, masterful utterance in which he dealt frankly with realities. It was adroit in that it pointed out the dangers imminent from nations that practice "international lawlessness" without creating diplomatic complications. It was masterful in that it emphasized the importance of domestic solidarity as a factor in preventing military preparedness.

The point of view so lucidly set forth by the president is one that takes a foreign policy which appeals to the support of the whole American people will be supported by them. It informs the world that the united front service of the United States is aware of world conditions and is prepared to meet them, along with others of the world, if necessary.

This stand against the faked claim artist is an important deterrent to others as it is in protecting the public against fakers and cowards. The accident racketeer is at last learning that "crime does not pay"—and learning it the hard way.

half pay—present a problem. Socially, John W. Rogers, assistant director of the Kentucky State Employment Service, says:

"These unemployed persons are generally willing to work and many willing to take anything available. The majority of them have automobiles, and could drive to scenes of employment on farms, where the ever present problem is procurement of labor needed occasionally. Farmers from any point in Nicholas county can get in touch with the Labor by the month than the farm bureau. Each week the state automobile transportation must pay for gasoline which is used."

Aside from that urban wage earners, farther than rural wage earners, become urban enterprises and can pay more than farms can pay, says Mr. Rogers.

Yet selling to farmers is necessary to bringing prosperity.

THE DOCTORS

(A. A. Bowmar, Woodford Sun)

Of all the professions, the profession of physicians, many of them unselfishly, in the course of my life, have been the most unappreciated. My opinion about them. There is no profession except the ministry that makes such a demand upon the time and energy of its members as the profession of medicine. There is no other profession except the ministry which has so few rich men in it (the ministry having practically none).

The average doctor who is worthy of his profession does a great amount of work for which he gets little or no pay, and a large part of the work he receives much less than the usual fee. In the matter of giving themselves into the service of humanity, the doctor stands in front rank. After allowing for the shortcomings in the profession, the standard of ethics which it maintains is far above that of any other profession. The medical profession is at the other end of the scale from commercialism. It has always had higher standards and enforces a higher average of conduct than could be obtained in any other way.

I always feel like taking off my hat to the doctors. In spite of some few cold, hard and selfish ones other physicians who would rather starve than see little children suffer. Such men fill pay than toil on.

SOME MISCELLANEOUS FURNITURE

Every house has or had the standard bits of furniture, even though the number of pieces may have been reduced to the minimum. Beds, tables, chairs, stoves, cooking utensils—these were almost as low as one could go. In more style and fashioned houses there may be an unlimited number of things that clutter up space and make a big display when an auction becomes necessary. It is an assortment of extra furniture that I somehow like to contemplate. People who have never lived in a home that was quite limited in its furnishings can hardly realize the thrill of making some luxury for the home.

Settees could be bought if one had the money. Fair ones could be made from the headboard and footboard of a discarded bed. The proper place for this handsome piece of furniture, often a rarity in the parlor, was in the hallway. The hostess's sincerest desire, a settee, was rarely realized. Occasionally, but "Daughter" built a rocker and gouch. But both of these articles of furniture were strands of wire and some barrel staves. Either would be quite a repose with propriety in those for whom I have always found them to be very considerate of me. I have always found them to be very considerate of me.

When families were large, chairs sometimes were hardly plentiful enough for the dining room and the dining-room-kitchen. Hence the head of the household made or had made a bench for the side of the table next to the wall, where the boys would sit. I have eaten many a square meal while sitting on a bench and somehow miss seeing one when I am visiting in a good-sized family.

One thing that ought to have got into poetry is the padded brick that graced the hearth. I have seen some of the best handiwork done on the covers for these bricks, chain and briar stitching in bright colors, also like the silk, embroidered quilt on the bed in the front room. Some one who is fond of collecting ought to collect these bricks and their covers. I am a sort of booster in how rural activity can make a thing of beauty out of a very unpromising and prosaic brick.

The whole matter of extra furniture illustrates how necessity can turn to its own uses things that otherwise would be useless. Not a nearly enough has been said of the simple but persistent artistry that has gone into many of the articles of furniture in the home. Some one who has a real love for rural life ought to collect these little bits of extra furniture and put in them the love with no thought of their being important in the history of art.

RESOLUTIONS

Again death has invaded our ranks and has taken from us our friend and brother, Dr. E. B. Hatter.

Dr. Hatter was possessed of an affliction that neither human hands nor medical skill could erase, and none knew better than himself that his time on this earth was short. Ye in those few years it seemed he tried to crowd all the kindness and service possible, offering to bring to his own pleasure and health to administer to the needs of others.

In memory of his many kindnesses and the high esteem we held for him, be it resolved that we reaved family our sincere sympathy.

Therefore, be it resolved that in the death of Dr. Hatter our little class lost a loyal member, our community an able and faithful physician, the family a devoted husband and father.

Be it further resolved that these resolutions be placed upon our minute book, a copy given to the Carlisle Mercury for publication, and a copy sent to the bereaved family.

Respectfully submitted,

PUBLIC SALE

Of
212 Acres Nicholas County Land
On WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18
At 10 O'Clock A. M.

Due to ill health and the infirmities of age, Mr. Simon Kenton has commissioned us to sell for him the following real estate. The sale will be held on the premises of Tract No. 1, situated 10 miles West of Carlisle, on the Panther Creek road, and 1 mile north from Rose Hill. This is a good community in which to live, convenient to both church and school. This land is strong blue grass soil and produces quality crops.

We will offer this farm in 3 tracts and then as a whole.

TRACT NO 1: Contains 58 acres of good strong bluegrass soil, all of which can be cultivated. Ample water supply and good fences, 3 acre capacity tobacco barn, garage and other outbuildings. This tract is all in grass except 15 acres, with adequate water supply and good fencing and is all cultivatable. Real Easy.

TRACT NO 2: Contains 18 acres and is contigious to Tract No. 1, with large store building. This tract is all in grass and easily cultivatable, ample water supply and well fenced.

TRACT NO 3: Contains 111 acres, all of which is cultivatable. 105 acres in old bluegrass sod and 6 acres of virgin woodland—a money maker.

Interested parties will be shown this property by Mr. Henry Kenton who resides on Tract No. 1, or by the selling agents.

Possession will be given on or before March 1, 1939.

Terms will be made known on day of sale.

That is why, if you have a two-story home or a large bungalow, an exercisor telephone will add comfort and convenience for the whole family.

In the bedroom the extra telephone instrument is not only desirable for nonessentials, but is also an added protection in case of fire, burglar or illness. The same protection and convenience are provided in a two-story home by an extension upstairs. In this type of house, too, the bedroom is a desirable location.

And remember, the cost of this added telephone convenience is surprisingly low. You don't even have to fill out an order blank to get an extension. Just telephone the Business Office.
