Townsend set out early in the 1900's to write "Kentucky in American Letters," which was published in 1912. He found it necessary to seek out many authors and review many books. Authors often sent him copies of their books, and many times purchased others not available in libraries.

One of the earliest histories in the collection is that published in 1824. It is a French translation of the first Kentucky history to be published. It was written by a French settlers to the new colony. Another early history is a collection of the first Kentucky letters to be published in book form. Another early book is Daniel Boone's autobiography, published in 1823
