Social and Society

SPRING CLEANING

The smoke of burning brush,
The caw of frenzied crows beyond the grove,
A dandelion along the lane,
A robin's ecstasy of love;
A flash of lightning, gust of rain
And then, to keep the omen true,
Of perfect rapture, in my heart
The urge to rise and do my part!

Well, here I go to clean out hate,
To rake the leaves up by the garth,
Haul off the ashes,
Smoothly the beds
Where soon the flowers will nod their heads—
Burn up the trash, each little pile
Curling a smoke-wreath 1 n a breath,
And then my heart, to clean it too,
And fill it with symptoms of spring.

The dark old collars down below,
Where all our angrier feelings go,
Clean them, and sweep the cobwebs down,
Beat the rug, unearth out the brown
To make this one and that this
Cleaned lives can always lovely stay!
