Child Is Recovering From Spotted Fever

Granddaughter Of William Richie Believed Infected While Picking Blackberries

Joyce Rowe, 8-year-old granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Richie, of the Sugar Creek vicinity of this county, is recovering at her home in Cincinnati from Rocky Mountain spotted fever, a highly fatal disease.

The child became ill as a result of being bitten by a tick while picking blackberries on her grandfather's farm about July 1. Mr. Richie said. She became ill nine days after her return home. While she remains ill, physicians now believe she will recover, according to a message received from her parents by Mr. Richie.

The Cincinnati Times-Star recently carried a picture and the following story concerning the rare disease:

Pretty 8-year-old Joyce Rowe was a happy little girl Friday as she sat up in her own bed in her own home at 551 Tusculum Ave., glorified her mother's cooking instead of the antiseptic odor of a hospital, and listened to the antics of her friends playing in the neighborhood, rather than the cold rustle of starched uniforms.

After two critical weeks in Children's Hospital she was on the road to recovery, a victor over highly-fatal Rocky Mountain spotted fever.

Only 10 days ago, Joyce lay semi-conscious, sometimes delirious, her body wracked with a fever that fluctuated among 104 degrees, her skin covered with red and blue and copper-colored hemorrhage blotches.

The straight, drained almost white visibly from her body and daily blood transfusions were necessary to sustain it. Nourishment could be given only by injection, for she could neither eat nor drink.

That was the patient whom Dr. Gwen Kitemiller was called upon to treat for a rare disease, about which little is known, removed to the National Institute of Health in Washington, the Harvard Medical School, Jefferson College in Philadelphia, the Rockefeller Institute in New York, the government laboratory established specifically for a study of the fever at Hamilton, Mont. The answers were all the same: "No specific treatment."

So Dr. Kitemiller treated Joyce symptomatically. Transfusions kept her strength up, glucose fed her and, after 10 days of hope and constant attention, Joyce began to rally, and the fever was thrown off. Meanwhile a 22-year-old youth had died of the disease at Hamilton, Mont. The answers were all the same: "No specific treatment."

Rocky Mountain spotted fever was discovered in Montana in 1896. Common wood and animal ticks were found to be its carriers. The result of 22 years of continuous experiment has been the death of one of the scientists from the disease, and the discovery of a satisfactory preventive serum. There is still, however, no specific cure. The mortality rate in Montana is 90 per cent.

"I believe that the disease is becoming a definite problem in this part of the country, as it long has been in Montana. Dr. Kitemiller said. "I feel that the Government should do all it can to destroy the ticks which carry it and warn people against exposing themselves to the tick bite."

She added that hospitalization was a primary requisite in successful treatment of the disease. She praised authorities of Children's Hospital and city health officials for their efforts in Joyce's behalf.

Bishop Names Ministers For Local Churches

Rev. Sweazy And Rev. Tomlin Returned To Carlisle At Annual Conference

THREE GROUPS UNITED

Three hundred ministers of the two united Kentucky Methodist conferences met in annual conference at Winchester Sunday as Bishop Arthur J. Moore, of Atlanta, Ga., Wednesday, closed the five-day meeting with a prayer. The conference by stands in peril of its life by the three Catholic bishops of Kentucky, Switch and designing men have brought into the world that which is to be the most disturbing element in the harmony and civilization with which it has been associated.

More than 2,500 persons in the congregation and Kentucky Wesleyan College heard Bishop Moore's closing address. No doubt had been raised whether or not Christianity could survive the test of the present day. The world is on fire. None of you can have escaped the grim danger presented by the spread of conflict in Europe. I believe God, do not lose hope. I believe in the final triumph of truth, but it will be a triumph only after it will be a triumph only after a struggle.

Seven Villages To Be Affected By Licking Dam

Blue Licks And Myers Station In This County Would Be Submerged

REPORT IS RELEASED

(Cynthiana Democrat)

Possible future inundation of seven villages, thousands of acres of fertile farm lands, and several miles of highway is shown by a report of the proposed Falmouth Reservoir Project received this week by L. L. Brothers, district superintendent of the Harrison county highways near Cynthiana. The map was prepared by the United States office at Cincinnati.

If the proposed dam is constructed it will point near Falmouth, as planned, it would prevent the overflowing from Falmouth almost to Cynthiana, Mrs. Brothers stated. The distance of more than 50 miles "as the crow flies." The lake formed by the dam would have a shore line of several hundred miles.

The map shows that McKinneysburg, Claysville, Milford, Blue Lick Springs, Myers, Shawhan, Sherburne, and Wyoming would be inundated by the waters of the lake. Also many miles of highways would have to be raised, rebuilt or relocated.

At Claysville a new bridge is planned. It would be necessary to relocate a point near the Claysville Baptist church. Also a new bridge would have to be raised or relocated. Similar changes would be made at the other towns which would be flooded by the proposed reservoir project.

In addition to the main dam at Falmouth, numerous smaller retaining dams may have to be made on the tributaries of the lake. For instance, unless such a dam is placed near the mouth of Beaver, the waters of the lake will extend Harrisville, Ky., to Butler, Kentucky, Sterling, Nicith Middletown and other Central Kentucky towns participated in the hunt.

The town was beautifully decorated for the occasion with bunting and flags of many nations. Hundreds of visitors from its tributaries at times when the waters are backed up. Even if East Union lost their next fair, it would be well worth it if they would be tied for first if the dams are being planned on the Kentucky river and other tributaries to the Ohio.
