STROLLER OF THE HILLS

(Marjorie A. Seiffert)

You stroll the hills and plow the land in spring
While sober men are turning the slothful soil
You sow your dreams in the careless wind, and bring
No sacrifice to the jealous harvest soil
Who family waits to see October frost
Send you shivering back to the fallow field
Unplowed, unsown, unharvested and lost
Beneath a crop of asters, and a yield of goldenrod; to see you shamed and humbled
Before the accusing meadow and its weeds.
But nor you cry: "Beloved earth, I come"
To gather flowers from heaven-sown meadows?
For even the blowman of the empty air
Who sows for beauty, shall not reap disgrace.
