SOCIAL and SOCIETY

THE FOUNDLING

(Lillian McCalley)

I heard a kitten crying in the rain,
Its plaintive voice awakened me from sleep.
I tried to nestle down once more in vain
Beneath the covers soft and warm and deep.

"Please let me in," the small voice seemed to say,
"I'm cold and hungry and your home is warm;
I'm tired and have come a weary way
And here I seek a refuge from the storm."

What could I do but rise, unbar my door,
And let it in and smooth its draggled fur,
Give it refreshment from my ample store
And listen to its happy grateful purr.

And ever since that rainy April day,
Its little feet have no desire to roam
Dearly we love our gentle "Kitty Gray,"
A well-beloved companion of our home.

The Challenge of an Unfinished Task

The fight against tuberculosis is one in which we may believe with our whole hearts and enter with the full force of our energies. It is an imperative task, made more so by the state of the world today. Every agency must take the initiative to discover and stamp out that unnecessarily dreadful as tuberculosis. Some agency must insist that tuberculosis be treated as it is discovered. Some agency must, ensure the funds to help the underprivileged to health. This task is definitely a local one—to give to an imperative and right-eous cause.

Disease is never a private matter. Yet multitudes of people live as though they believe that their health is entirely their own business. A sick person must be cared for by others. A diseased body becomes a burden upon society. And a disease like tuberculosis, which is contagious, makes the carrier of it a menace to all with whom he comes in contact. Tuberculous person may be an innocent carrier of a deadly disease, yet he is a menace to human health just as surely as though he deliberately set out to destroy the bodies of his associates.

The battle against tuberculosis must be waged against the ignorance of those who are unaware of its dangers. It is always a battle against the poverty of those who are financially unable to care for themselves. And it is a battle against those with indifference, a mood of which most of us are guilty. We must defeat the tendency to "let George do it alone." We must convert men and women to the importance of fighting, by united cooperation in the effort to discover tuberculosis wherever it lurks so that it may be treated and cured.

We may have confidence in our work because the fight against tuberculosis is a success-ful task. Real progress has been made. We know tuberculosis is now as a curable disease. The decrease in the death rate from tuberculosis in our nation during the past generation is startling and encouraging.

Progress may bring a relaxation of efforts. Even in a movement dedicated to the welfare of mankind, there may come a tendency to rest on the laurels earned. But progress ought to be a challenge to increased efforts. Our fight against tuberculosis is an unfinished task. We shall see the end of the battle. But our generation may have to do those who follow us in this work a fight well advanced toward ultimate victory.

In the fight against tuberculosis we may appeal to one of the basic instincts of mankind—the desire for self-preservation. Ours is not only a charitable work, it is a protection of our personal health. When tuberculosis is defeated, we are protecting our own homes.

The Christmas Seal Sale is a fight. It is an investment in a genuine form of "life-insurance." As the public comes to this realization, there should be an increased appreciation of the value of our work, a rapid acceleration in the response to the Christmas Seal Sale—as an investment in public and personal health.

WORLD'S TOUGHEST JOB.

All the effort and thinking that the great men of history—Napoleon, Charlemagne, and the rest—have put into their jobs can apparently be matched by a contemporary American.

He is Franklin D. Roosevelt.

No matter whether we agree with him or not—and, incidentally, that is one of the things that makes a tough job tougher—not one of us can help but sympathize with and admire the great man in the White House, who is steering so deftly and resolutely the course that he believes best for America and the world.

Like a great captain on the bridge of a mighty liner, he is looking far ahead into the distance and he is steering in the same alone and unafraid.

We have to accord such a man the highest admiration, whether we agree with his ideas or not. And he may rest assured that when a final irrevocable decision is reached, the blood and brawn of the country will be with him.—Boston Post (1D).
