Crisis In Far East Headlines War Events

Dr. Charles M. Knapp, University Professor, Reviews Eastern Situation

During this past week interest in the news coming from abroad has centered on that of the Far East and the battle bordering upon the Mediterranean. That in the Far East has seemed to endanger most the continued peace of the United States. Events on land and sea and diplomatically, Japan seems bent on taking over the Indies. Of Thailand and French Indo-China she has made further demands. Their ports she has seen move naval vessels and troops toward other points of which seem to threaten early attack upon the great British base at Singapore, gateway to the Dutch Islands of the East Indies. Of these reports and events to be sent further reinforcements to Singapore. In addition it has been announced that they have laid a great mine field in the Formosa Straits and United States announced that large numbers of heavy bombers had been assigned to bases in the Philippines. Japan has declared that her intentions are pacific but that those of the Singapore area. Meanwhile Japan is moving rapidly along a path planned by Hitler in Mein Kampf. It is what would now seem to be either war upon Britain and the United States in the Far East or a complete backdown and about face. That Japan is becoming worried by our far eastern policies of recent weeks is now clear; but whether she will abandon them appears uncertain. Unless she can find some way of doing so without losing face it would seem that open hostilities must soon be inevitable there.

In the Mediterranean theater interest has centered in the British campaign against troops as tourists, into Bulgaria and Rumania, and the war thrown across the Danube by which heavy equipment will soon be rolling across to aid the special units already there. It has been in this area that it is indicate that the Greeks have entered into negotiations for peace with Mussolini. Last week end it seemfid that after a new Turkish-Bulgarian pact had been announced by Berlin that Hitler had definite intentions not to go to war if German troops should enter Bulgaria to attack the Greeks on the flank. However, Turkey has declared that such was the intent of the new treaty, that she retained her alliance with Britain. As a result at this writing it is not clear what will happen when, as is now expected, German troops in force enter Bulgaria this week. Probably what Turkey was indicating is that she will not go to the rescue of the Greeks and fight, unless it is clear that she herself is also to be subjected to attack.

Thus the Greeks seem to have lost all hope of Turkish support in meeting a thrust across her Bulgarian frontier. How much further aid she can receive from the British remains to be seen. During the week Britain occupied the island of Lemnos, not far from the entrance to the Dardanelles and Salonika, the objective of any German advance. This gives Britain air and naval base much closer to eastern Greece and Bulgaria and the Rumanian oil fields. There is, however, as yet no evidence that the British intend to send an army to occupy and defend Salonika, as they did in the last war. Whether such a move could be sustained against a heavy attack is an open question. But what the British have been doing with their Libyan forces since the capture
