Tidbits—Ky. Folklore

EARLY RISING
Our home has become so complex that regular hours for everybody are no longer expedient or advisable. But when most of us were farmer folk, very early rising was the thing were different. Consequently we were the standard for a community became almost or severe as to be the envy of Persians. To deviate very much from this standard meant that one was considered lazy.
The matter of early rising became almost a fetish. Just what was the best hour for rising I have never known. But the idea of getting up "before the sun" was firmly fixed in long days of summer, seems to have been the goal that one could do. Dawn rise, like the worm in the Proverbs, "what is it to me?" seemed to be most virtuous. Some 4 four neighbors I knew got up by the light as ringing the farm dinner bell some hour earlier than any other. You could get up any time after three o'clock in the morning and see the lights on in the cottages, where the women of the house was cooking breakfast, while out at the barn the glow of the lantern showed that the man of the house was feeding the stock and milking the cows. "When I taught my first school, I boarded with a farm family. They always ate both breakfast and supper by lamplight. The 4th hour was the time while we were at breakfast. I do not know that I ever named Carlisle in honor of his old home town in Kentucky. The only lady related that he was born at Carlisle, Pennsylvania; that his folks brought him to Carlisle, Kentucky, when he was a small child.

British Invade Libya Again, Gains Reported

On Wednesday next Petain is to go to Paris for a conference with Axis leaders. From there moves it is suspected that Vichy has agreed to more active collaboration with the Axis. Whether Petain will agree to turn over the French fleet and the North African troops and Tunesian air and naval bases is problematical. The British campaign is designed to prevent it and to obtain those bases themselves, and thereby clear the Mediterranean for their fleet and prepare the way for a possible invasion across the 90 miles of water to Sicily.
Clear and cold weather has permitted the resumption of the German offensive from the Arctic Circle to the Black Sea. Before Leningrad the Russians claim that they have made local advances. On the Moscow front, however, the German armies have reached a village about 50 miles from Moscow, and perhaps, another only 31 miles distant. The fighting is reported as terrific. The Russians claim that their lines are forming ban-holding intact. Kerch fell in mid-week and Sunday the Germans claimed that their offensive in the south had captured Rostov on the Don. This important manufacturing center is the northern gateway for an advance into the Caucasus oil fields and therefore must be prevented at any cost by the Russians. It is on the direct route for the transfer of oil to the northern fronts. So Moscow and Leningrad British and American supplies are reported reaching the Russians via Archangel in large quantities.
Saturday, John L. Lewis president of the United Mine Workers Union agreed to end the strike by arbitration. The miners are to go back to work and a settlement is to be reached
