ONE LINE

OF DEFENSE THAT

Must REMAIN IMPREGNABLE

Of vital importance to the South's security is the depend-ability of its far-reaching telecommunication between mili-tary, industrial, and civilian s necessary to the nation's defense.

In this crisis, Southern Bell is faced with the three-fold task of giving "all-out" service to defense, industry, and the public-a task requiring ever

In many of these places, mass troop and civilian concentra-tions, in addition to increased industrial demands, have made the continuation of normal telephone service difficult.*

In these critical times, telephone workers ask your cooperation and appreciative understanding of the problems which confront them, knowing that you, too, are "all-out" for defense—that it is our common
