Carlisle Future Farmers Undertake 97 Projects

Carlisle Future Farmers are busy with projects, with an announcement that 97 projects will be undertaken by the chapter's 28 members during the coming year.

The program as planned by the group includes the raising of 21 head of beef cattle, 80 head of hogs, 50 head of sheep, 1,183 chicks, and other tobacco farming.

Also included in the plan are four acres of corn and seed, two acres of potatoes, a half acre of beans, and a garden crop. Further, six of the group plan to raise 600 capons.

Going all out in the Victory Drive, the group announced that it has purchased, as a club, $144.25 in Defense Savings Stamps and has collected a total of 2,400 pounds of scrap iron and 1,250 pounds of tin and old tires.

"We are all trying to do our part in the war effort," was the way a club spokesman summed it up.

All-Tourney Squads Are Named At Paris

At the conclusion of the 40th district tournament Saturday night at the Paris high school gymnasium, Center Male high school of Bourbon county was awarded the sportsmanship trophy. Paris won the winner's trophy and Bourbon county high, the runner-up trophy. M. Peale Collier, Paris commissioner, presented the awards.

The all-tournament team was selected as follows: Hough of Bourbon county; Gaunce of Headquarters; Boaz of Paris; E. B. Wagoner of Bourbon county; McKenzie of Paris; Patrick of Center Hill; Imaks of Paris; Dean of Bourbon county; Adams of Clintonville, and Barrowman of M. M. I.

Headquarters, Nicholas county, was awarded the sportsmanship trophy in the junior high school group. Paris was presented the winning trophy and M. M. I. the runner-up trophy. The junior high all tournament team is as follows: Tyler of Paris; A. Fish of M. M. I.; Hedges of Paris; Williams of Little Rock; Scroggins of M. M. I.; E. Crump of Paris; Mitchell of North Middletown; Singleton of Paris; G. Fish of M. M. I., and A. Crump of Paris.

To Use Borax On Alfalfa Tests

From the County Agents office came the announcement that sufficient time and phosphate was applied and the seed has been inoculated, that they run a test with the application of Borax. It has been recently learned that Borax is one of those elements like Manganese which is needed in very small quantities, by many crops and fruits. But if applied in any considerable quantity it becomes highly toxic and poisonous to plants. A small quantity of Borax has been furnished to the County A gent for experimental purposes and he will gladly assist in building a few demonstrations over the county to determine whether Boron deficiency is affecting the alfalfa crop in this county. Those interested should contact the office at once as the application should be made this spring.

Hybrid Corn Is Called Helpful

Last year approximately five hundred farmers in this county planted an estimated 10,000 acres and acres with seed of hybrid corn. Results in most cases were excellent, and the yield of the hybrid corn produce on the average seven more bushels to the acre than local varieties, but it stood up better and seemed more resistant to wet and dry weather. Several farmers found the hybrids easier to harvest and others reported that the hybrids matured earlier than the native corn. In general hybrids have been seen to have better opportunity to sow cover crops early.

The following are recommendations of William C. John Extension Agronomist, University of Kentucky, who is spending a few days on Hybrid corn.

1. If you have never used a hybrid buy two or three bushels this year.

2. Do not plant your entire crop to hybrids until you are convinced that they pay.

3. Do not compare hybrids with local corn by yields. Are Ady easily weigh the yields from weed areas.

4. For yellow corn we recommend:

U. S. 13—for early maturity (or late planting) and low stalk.

U. S. 102—for late maturity (or early planting) and tall stalk.

U. S. 103—for intermediate maturity and stalk.

The latter two are giving satisfactory results for silage.

5. For white corn there are three principal hybrids.

Ky. 69 and Ky. 72 are very similar and give excellent results under average conditions.

Ky. 201 is a large eared, rank growing and late maturing white hybrid and should be planted early on soils which hold moisture well.

Financial Independence

THE desire to possess a dependable income, adequate to provide for one's needs and to meet one's human obligations, is indeed legitimate. The difficulties encountered in trying to accumulate and to safeguard material possessions have taught many that security is not to be found in matter, and that the practical way to financial independence is the spiritual way. . .

In "Miscellaneous Writings" Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, writes (p. 207), "God gives you His spiritual ideas, and in turn, flies give you daily supplies."

"God," one may say, "food and clothing and houses are material, and yet essential to one's comfort and existence. How can spiritual ideas furnish these supplies?" In answer, let us ask another question, Have we not known of cases in which ingenuity, dependability, quietness, love, faith, and other similar qualities have brought very tangible returns in the form of position, improved business, or direct monetary income? Such qualities are always in demand, and their exercise often brings unexpected results. Moreover, to practice the presence of God, divine Love, infinite Mind, the source of true health, strength, wisdom, opportunity, intelligence, and unfailing discrimination, self-pity, fear, envy, resentment, and worry bring to income of good, both in spiritual and in material value. They must be discarded for God's gifts can flow. If we are to see God, good, expressed in our daily experience.

As we strive to understand God and to recognize that He is man's infinite image and likeness, manifesting all the wonderful thoughts with which to correct every erroneous belief, we shall prove the theory which proclaims that one who is expressing divine qualities cannot remain in physical need. For if a condition of lack or poverty is to be met, it must be met at the mental state determines the outward experience. When the mental home is clean and pure, filled with Christlike thoughts, which naturally result in unselfish spiritual surroundings, or, when one's consciousness is overflowing with loving, uncritical thoughts for all men, one finds that he cannot long experience lack. For he is living and working differently at his real business of reflecting God, who is Love, for here love meets the lack of love-less appropriation.

Compared with a state wherein we felt that we no longer needed to trust God's love, or His ideas, would be poverty indeed; while the greatest wealth we can gain is the establishment of a fund of absolute faith in our heavenly Father's care in the midst of the confusion of the multitudes over valuable lessons for all humanity. The Master, having given thanks for what was at hand dispensed it in a way that was suitably modest, and after demonstrating that more than enough was available, he allowed not even the surplus to be lost.
