The Mercury and Anonymous Letters.

From the number of undened letters which have been received lately at The Mercury office, some word of explanation as to the policy of this newspaper in regard to the publication of this type of letter may be in order.

The Mercury must refuse to publish letters which do not bear the name of the sender, although we will not reveal that name unless the writer wishes. He or her identity is known. But we absolutely refuse to publish letters which are merely signed "Subscriber" or "Reader" or "Interested Party."

Last week in the mails we received a letter from a lady who signed herself "Rural Mother." She was a strong pressure argument, Mails: she was a strong pressure argument, as far as the coming election over the local option issue is concerned. She made the statement that in her letter, not once, but several times, that we would be criminal if we did not publish it. She also accused us of being not publish it. She also accused us of being not publish it. She also accused us of being not prudery, but that matters little because some of the dry's have screwed us for being too wet and the wets of being prudery ever since this thing started and we can an editorial saying that we were going to remain neutral on the matter.

But we hate for anyone to question our intellectual honesty. We want it at all times and to prove it before except that there were certain questions on which we did not consider to be our duty to express an opinion, one of which we did not consider to be our duty to express an opinion, one of which we did not consider to be our duty to express an opinion, one of
