Shoes For The Iron Horse.

Most of us at one time or another have seen powerful dray horses pulling a heavily loaded freight wagon. Vivid is the memory of steel-shod hooves striking sparks on hard pavements, as the straining bodies classed for footing. Such horses have become a rarity. Their counterpart today is the "Iron Horse," the railroads.

The Peoria, Illinois, Star, in commenting on the recent move to reduce railroad freight rates, observes that reducing rates would amount to removing the oil from the iron horse. Anyone who has seen flesh and blood horses at work knows what would happen to them if, at a time when they were struggling under an unprecedented load, they were suddenly to have their shoes removed. They would be able to complete the job all right because good horses are trained to never quit. But they probably would suffer injury that would impair their usefulness for a long time to come. And so it is with the railroads.

As the Peoria Star points out: "Anyone with half an eye can see the clogged and troubled condition of railroads passing under a staggering burden. The railroads are doing a job which history will record as 'magnificent.' Freight tonnage jumped 33 per cent in '42 over '41, and passenger travel 80 per cent, with 2,000,000 troops being moved a month."

The railroads are now showing money as a result of this large traffic volume. But against this must be charged the wear and tear on the iron horse's shoes. It will take more food and other additional care which costs more money. Rate reductions under present conditions would not only remove the shoes from the iron horse but would also mix sawdust with his grain.

Empty Words Mean Empty Cupboards.

The food industry has warned government executives that thousands will go hungry in this country this year unless the government moves promptly to solve the pressing manpower and distribution problems of the food industry. Lack of manpower, beginning on the farm and ending behind the counters of retail merchants, is assuming grave proportions.

The position of small distributors is critical at the moment. Officials have steadily refused to include the merchant in the war program as a part of the manpower. They have so fag failed to recognize the essential part he plays in putting necessities into the hands of consumers. They fail to recognize that without his expert cooperation, price and rationing controls would be demoralized, that competent merchandisers are vital to efficient distribution.

Colleges of efficient distribution would mean that food grown and processed could not reach the consumer. Waste and decay of precious food would assume tragic proportions to hungry people. It would promote inflation, and inevitable curtailment of war production.

The food industry has asked officials to make clear that food production, processing, and distribution ranks with armaments in importance. Pirating and drafting of essential employes must cease if we are to eat. They also have asked for the proper allocation of food supplies to maintain civilian health and morale, and the simplification of rationing procedure. They have asked for these things repeatedly. Beyond vague generalities no action has been taken.

Disaster will come if this policy continues. Either the appointed officials, or Congress must act.

OIL FOR THE EAST

(Christian Science Monitor)

Unless Germany is knocked out of the war before another winter, there arises the possibility of an American transportation problem more serious than that of recent months. It required Herculean efforts to avert suffering last winter. But another winter would require even greater efforts.

The railroads, unable to get new equipment, have done a splendid job, but even greater demands may be made on them.

The present average of 10 to 15 miles an hour for tank cars from the Southwest to the assembling of marked improvement. If "troop cars" were built, these could be handled in long trains, with freight engines, thus releasing many passenger locomotives for eastward movement of fuel at much higher speed.

As for coal, there formerly were 13,000,000 tons handled by barge from Norfolk to the North annually, which now must move by rail, involving 6,200 carloads weekly. Both the coal and the oil trains for sometimes follow circuitous routes, which consume time and days and engine-miles. Intensive studies might correct this.

The problem of providing the East with coal, fuel oil and other line next winter is too pressing to be overlooked because of the pressure of other needs. Every little waste in transportation-miles must be eliminated it entirely is imperative.

U. K. Soldiers Receive Credits If Earned

Soldiers enrolled in an Army specialized training program to begin soon on the University of Kentucky campus will receive credit after the war to receive college credits for the scholastic work completed while here, under terms of a bill which has been announced by Dr. Leo M. Chamberlain, university dean of instruction. The university already has prepared a one-card recording system whereby the grades and instructor's comments on the progress of each soldier-student participating in the specialized program will be transferred to the back of his registration card and filed in separate cabinets from the regular university students' files.

If, at the end of the war, a soldier who has taken a course at the university desires to procure college credit, he will be granted that credit upon application, provided he can certify a satisfactory grade and a graduate of an accredited high school or the equivalent has been made and provided that his grades while at the university were such as to make him eligible for credit.

(The Sentinel-Echo)

Again The Sentinel-Echo is unable to print the names of boys who were sent to the induction center from Laurel county today. Neither can we disclose the number, though we might say there is a large number of them. This paper has received complaints, both locally and by mail, because of our failure to publish these lists, than for any one thing in many a day. But all may be sure that it is not in any way our fault; and even though the lists continue to be published in many counties in this and other States, as our subscribers tell us, neither is it the fault of the local Selective Service Board.

Selective service headquarters at Louisville has issued a ruling that the name of the selectee who must not be published until they have been actually inducted at the reception center. I do not know, but it is presumed that they are merely forwarding to the local board the notice they had received from Washington.

Nevertheless it is a most abominable rilling; a ruling that can be circumvented by editors, and that it can see, except to create and develop suspicions. Newspapers are called upon every day to print almost of every conceivable thing, than will fill their columns, and that is the reason why they do print it as they can and consider helpful to the war effort in their communities. Then when there comes up a matter of real news in which all of us are vitally interested they are forbidden to print it because it is advisable. But they can't help it. They are under in charge of Selective Service regulations and have much faith in the people who make up our country, or there would be no such general ruling. Maybe someone somewhere has just merely had a brainstorm. It seems to me that these lists should be published as fast as made up—and that those in charge should be not only willing but anxious to furnish the newspapers a list of the names. If there is a danger in one that prevents some from going—and that will always be the case—this should be announced along with the list, and steps taken to take their places, when they are gone. The only part of the ruling concerning publication with which I can agree, is that the names of those who are turned down at the induction center should not be published. To publish that list would serve no good purpose.

Sincerely,
S.
