DONALDSON THE CHOICE

The people have spoken through the ballot box and named J. Lyter Donaldson, Carrollton, Ky., the standard-bearer for the Democratic party to oppose former Court of Appeals Judge S. S. Willis, Ashland, Ky., in the November election. Judge Willis was unopposed for the Republican nomination. Mr. Donaldson is well known throughout the state having served as State Highway Commissioner under both the Chandler and Johnson administrations. Resigning recently when he announced that he would make the race for the nomination for Governor. He is supported by a strong ticket and it is now up to party leaders to build up a united front for the coming campaign, backing up to the election in November. It will be necessary for all county and precinct leaders to thoroughly organize and build up the forces in the party ranks.

The Republicans will no doubt put up a strong fight in the coming election since there was no opposition in the Governor's race in that party and many of the other nominations were subject to primary contest. The election in November will be a real test in state politics.

AUGUST

(New York Times)

August is one of the hottest months on the calendar, so hold your breath and turn on the electric fan. It is also one of the longest months, and sometimes it seems even longer. But it brings roasting ears, even if butter is rationed, and it brings ripe tomatoes in such abundance that nobody can eat them all. That's why we have tomato juice and catsup—thank August for that.

Sometimes it rains in August; August thunderstorms are masterpieces of bluster and bombardment. And sometimes August is bone-dry and full of dust, and we would gladly swap the whole of it for one rainy March week end. In March, of course, we usually feel just the reverse. But this is August.

There isn't a holiday worth mentioning in August, but along toward the middle of the month there usually is a sizable shower of shooting stars. Of somewhat lesser cosmic importance are the twenty-third anniversary this month, of the first talking picture and the eighty-fourth anniversary of Blondin's hike across Niagara on a tight rope.

August also brings katydids, elderberries, blackberry pie and goldenrod. It brings dog-days and a bilious tinge to back-country swimming holes. It finally slows up the lawn grass, which has been racing the lawnmower for weeks and weeks. And it makes those who have already had vacations realize what a long, long time it will be before the next one rolls around.

August is just another thirty-one days of summer, but it sure gets one in condition to appreciate fall when it comes. Good old August—take it, and like it.

IS LEGITIMATE DISTRIBUTION WANTED?

Unless producers and consumers wish to contact each other through a national black market, they will have to unite with retail food distributors in a demand for types of control which permit legitimate distribution to live. That is the forthright opinion of one chain store spokesman, and there is little question but that it is the opinion of the vast majority of rail industry. Said this spokesman: "One simple fundamental of distribution is that by the performance of a needed and economic service, a distributor earns a reasonable and legitimate distribution in America has a record of performance for economical cost unequaled in the history of the world. Why cannot control be set up which will permit the strength of American distribution to be exercised fully in the fight against inflation?

"Food control has been administered with only casual and lip-service recognition of the truth that cost-recovery is the cornerstone of legitimate distribution. And it is because recovery of costs, in so many instances has been made impossible that such large volumes of food have been sanctioned into illegitimate black market distributive channels where cost recovery, but in many cases, abnormal and unnecessarily high profits have accrued to the illegitimate distributor.

"The government can damn the black market operator to high heaven. It will do no good as long as a program which ignores production costs while trying to limit prices to consumers. Putting food distributors out of business will not stop inflation. Low prices on nonexistent or inferior goods in honest market places are merely an irritating farce to consumers forced to seek those necessities from dishonest sources at artificially high prices. The day of reckoning is not far away."

Henry Ford, on his eightieth birthday, "Young Americans should know that there are two ways of doing business—one that makes money its master, and one that makes money its servant."

Oh, boy! When Tokyo gets to be No. 1 on our aviators' bill of parade.

REAL CONSERVATION

Americans are learning the meaning of conservation. They are learning from an exacting teacher—war. War has us in a matter of months switched this country from a nation of abundance to a nation of severely as far as civilians are concerned. And where there is scarcity there must be conservation. Automobile owners cannot burn up their cars with speed as they were wont to do a few years ago. Housewives cannot carelessly discashish household appliances, or toss out surplus food.

The new effort to conserve must reach farther than dare driving and eating the last crust of bread. It must reach into one of the most important existing fields of conservation—free prevention. Several hundred millions of dollars worth of property is destroyed each year by fire. The bulk of that loss is sheer criminal waste, brought about by indifference and carelessness on the part of individuals. This carelessness can be eradicated by education, by learning that preserving a property-destroying fire is as great a step toward conservation as driving your auto slowly to save tires. Fire prevention authorities have emphasized that "The development of a safety awareness that will control the daily actions of the individual is necessary if preventable fires and conflagrations are to be reduced to a minimum"

Until our individual conservation efforts are effectively directed toward preventing fire hazards, in the home, in the factory, on the farm and every place else where life and property are involved, we have not learned the lesson of conservation.

LABOR BOSSES NOT NEEDED

United States Senator Rufus C. Holman has called on the Senate Committee on Education and Labor to find out the National Labor Relations Act and protect the American laborer from "exploitation." He has demonstrated the Act as responsible for "open violence intimidation, and racketeering and says it should be amended to save the good features of it and yet reform the mischief-making provisions ruthlessly in it."

The National Labor Relations Act as it now reads and is administered permits and encourages racketeering of a most vicious and unAmerican character.

By means of force and violence both employees and employers—are intimidated by localized gangsters, so that many good American citizens no longer are permitted to enter into free enterprise either by use of their labor or capital.

"All this is wrong and immoral and should be corrected."

In my opinion, and it is my hope that the committee will promptly offer the reformatory amendments which the existing chaotic and unAmerican situation demands. The present law, in effect, sets up labor-bosses as strike-masters or racketeers who are parasites on the earnings of the workers and an effective force in regulating the freedom and liberty of American citizens."

The Senator states an issue which must be settled fairly for employes as well as employers if freedom of opportunity and liberty for the individual survive in this nation.

THE SHANGRI-LA (New York Times)

The United States Navy, instigated and abetted by that lover of naval lore, Franklin D. Roosevelt, is about to break a tradition. There are fairly strict rules for labeling ships of war a battleship is called after a State, a heavy cruiser ratet a big city, a light cruiser a small city, a destroyer honors some naval hero or some distinguished friend of the Navy, and a submarine takes the name of a fish or some animal that is at home in the water. Aircraft carriers enjoy more freedom, for they can be named after any fighting ships of our Navy or after battles. Thus the Saratoga, the Bonhomme Richard, the Yorktown, the Enterprise and the Hornet have left us the aircraft carrier, for which we are all, soon, asked to buy an extra dollars worth of war savings stamps this month. will beston a triple honor on Mr Hilton's bold imagination in the last three years. The man who carried out what was probably the most spectacular act of modern Subscriptions for the Shangri-La are now well past the half-a-million mark. We are promised that supplies will take part in another attack on Tokyo—exact date withheld for reasons of security and the Shangri-La Subscription Fund is now open to come and avail themselves of his bounty. Checks should be made payable to nobody in particular.

AMERICANS USING SOAP AT UNPRECEDENTED RATE

Americans have been buying soap this year faster than it has been manufactured under government restrictions, the agriculture department has reported.

The department said purchases have been at the rate of 1,832,000,000 pounds, a year, or 90 per cent of the 1940-41 average use. Manufacturers are producing 95 per cent of the 1940-41 average amount of soap, it said, from materials, due to a wartime shortage in supplies of fats and oil.

LOCAL PERSONAL SOCIAL

SOUNDS OF A SUMMER NIGHT

The summer nights are populous with sounds.
Fabulous sounds that I would segregate
There are the crickets and their brilliant rounds.
The katydids, the challenge of the freight.
The owl intones his knotted moan
The loon, his startling laughter.
From beyond
The pasture slope a curious little dog
Questions the reedy voices from the pond
The cow-bell's silver tongue moves to a whisper.
As thunder low, soft-spoken, portends showers—
And suddenly the wind is bright, yet crisper.
As raindrops tiptoe in among the flowers.
Beyond all these are sounds that are more precious for their anonymity.
