BIBLE THOUGHT
THIS WEEK

First the blade, then the ear after that the full corn in the ear.—Mark IV. 28.

"Build thee more stately mansions O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven by a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea."
—O. W. Holmes.

APPROACHING 1944

It is quite difficult to avoid some mention of war in attempting to write on any particular subject at this time. As we review the year 1943 and examine the perspective for 1944, we see the effects of what has been and what it is likely to be. The whole fiber of the nation has centered on the war for more than the past twelve months and with increased intensity since Pearl Harbor.

New emphasis is being placed on world peace and what will take place before that peace is accomplished. Right now plans are in the making for the greatest air invasion undertaken ever attempted by any nation or group of nations, with a hope that the European war will be brought to a victorious finish early in 1944, or at least before the end of another twelve months. Surely, Germany cannot fight longer than twelve more months with all the united strength that is and will be massed against her in the early months of the coming year.

Much has been accomplished during the past year. Not as we would prefer having it, but in a time of war we must know that the business, the home, the school, the church, sports, and social functions cannot move along in the normal way. We must give our time, energies, and money to the strengthening of the nation's war effort above everything else or suffer the consequences. America is the only larger nation that has escaped the destruction of its homes, factories, cities, and railroads, by the death dealing bomb from the air and we should be very thankful it is so.

True it is we have given much and will be called upon to give more in 1944 yet those who were fortunate enough to sit around the heavily indexed dinner tables during the Christmas season can well know that starvation is not striking at the doors of America's homes. Homes are intact with the family circle except for those who are away fighting for our liberties and we miss them more than we would miss anything else from the home, but let us have brave hearts and courage to fight the battle to a victorious end during 1944 so they may return to the fireside and resume their places around the table and take up normal lives in the businesses of this great nation."

May 1944 bring true our fondest hopes for victory with the least possible cost in human life. Material is worthless when life is gone, so let us all resolve with the new year to save the life of American boys by doing our full duty to bring the war to a conclusion the earliest possible moment.

END OF VOLUME LXXVII

With this issue of The Mercury completes volume seventy-seven. During the past seventy years many history-making incidents have taken place, some of which will have a greater effect upon the whole world than the present war. The Mercury has experienced many ups and downs but has survived all adversities. The people of Nicholas county have unbounding interest and faith in The Mercury and have stood by and given their support under all circumstances. We know they will continue that interest and support for which the present management is grateful.

YOUR PROBLEM

A well-founded fear is growing concerning the future of small enterprise. Total war has tended to centralize industry. Somehow the trend must be corrected. But in correcting it, the belief should not be allowed to develop that there is something wrong in size alone. This is a big country. It will always need the productive effort of big industry just as it will need the distinctive effort of little industry. Moreover the problems of both biz and little industry will be a large extent alike in ways be inseparable. For example, the small business man cannot remain indifferent to the present danger of permanent socialization of industries such as electric power, transportation and natural resources.

So when this war is over, the field of public ownership is extended to include basic industries employing large numbers of workers—and yeters—the way will have been opened for the destruction of representative government. Any government that controls the jobs and resources of a people will not be content to play long the role of servant. Our basic industries at present are owned and operated by millions of private citizens under stringent public regulation. This is as it should be. The individuals who pioneer and take risks in the development of an oil well, a mine, a railroad or any other enterprise, should be allowed to enjoy the fruits of his their efforts, just the same as the newsboy who spends months building up a clientele on a certain corner deserves his just reward.

When it comes to questions of property rights and rewards for achievement, all must receive the same treatment. It can be no other way. If these things are restricted or taken away from one group as has again happened in the case of the coal mine owners, before they are taken from others, even the newsboy.

CAPITULATION

Settlement of the coal mine strike with substantial pay increases to the miners has wiped out the last remnants of the imaginary anti-inflation line. Where the line was supposed to be now no real spiral of living costs will take place, is anybody's guess.

But there are two points that stand out clearly. First, the situation has become far too serious to waste time cursing John L. Lewis and the mine workers. Unless the inflationary spark which their action has touched off can be extinguished promptly, the war effort will be imperiled. Second, is the obvious fact that politics as usual won't work in a nation faced with a war cost of three or four hundred billion dollars. As Time Magazine observes: "Ever since the war's start, the U. S. wage and price policies have been an uninterpreted mass of rulings and directives, administered by a group of mutually jealous boards and agencies."

Inflation control will hort. But it will not hort a fraction as much as inflation itself. This warning has been repeated until it has lost meaning. But the uncertain of the President of the United States standing helpless before the demands of the miners, is one of the manifestations of uncontrolled inflation. If that has no meaning to Americans, nothing ever will.

DIGGIN' COAL

(Paris Daily Enterprise)

Flying the American flag over the coal mines doesn't seem to have accomplished much. It was only done as a sign that the United States government had assumed authority over the mines to keep coal production moving, but the moral and patriotic effect which might have been expected doesn't seem to materialize. Apparently the miners don't see much connection between coal and the flag. They work or not, as they happen to feel about it. And there doesn't seem to be much information that liberal wage increases have stimulated the industry.

Yet coal is a war industry, as much as any. It is especially needed now as the winter season is on, for lost time, enlarge the coal piles, replenish the nation's empty coal bins and help to win the war.

The miners are said to resent cricisms. There is a very simple remedy for that. All that is expected of them is about half as much work, in their own line, as they turned in much pay.

A REASONABLE REQUEST

Much thought is being given to the problem of providing employment for men returning from military service. So far as possible old jobs are being kept available. But this does not apply to one group in the service whose jobs were the result of years of training and individual effort.

When a doctor goes to war his job cannot be preserved for him. His patients must go elsewhere. When he returns, he must find new patients, a slow, tedious task that will not be made any easier by the fact that the practice of other doctors released from the armed forces will be doing the same thing.

However, the doctors are not kicking. All the average doctor asks is a chance to work in such a way that he is best fitted by environment and training—the way of the individual doctor under the traditional American medical system. It is a reasonable request.

Rabbits Can Be Controlled If They Damage Crops

Rabbits may sometimes invade home gardens and cause serious damage, as they return day after day to feed on the carefully tended crops. If weeds, grass, and brush are near the garden, these animals are likely to cause some damage.

A good wire fence around the garden will keep rabbits out, but it is expensive. Furthermore the wire for such a fence is not available to a gardener at present.

In the country, or on suburban districts where shooting is safe, a gun may easily be used to control rabbits if the law allows this where rabbits are troublesome. Rabbits are most active from twilight until early morning.

Repellents are not often effective, since strong chemicals of this sort damage the plants. Poisoned baits may reduce rabbit injury, but it must be sprayed on the plants every few days, and after every rain.

Simple box traps, baited with apple or carrots, are effective. The means for rabbit control. Several of these placed in the garden or along the borders where the animals enter will usually be sufficient to put a stop to their damage.

Engue Raspberry Mosaic

Virus diseases of raspberry mosaic are most easily detected at flowering time. Inspection at this advantage of it and start rouging all diseased plants immediately. Although this virus disease is most serious on black raspberries, it may also be very destructive to red and purple varieties. The best control measure is the removal of all plants showing the symptoms.

You can identify red raspberry mosaic by large irregular green blisters or swellings on the leaves, surrounded by yellowish green tissue. Diseased plants are also stunted and the leaves have a dark green and yellow speckled appearance. New growth is shorter than that of healthy plants, and fruits of diseased plants are usually dry, seedy and tasteless.

When roguing, remove and destroy not only the young shoots showing the symptoms, but also the entire mother plant from which the shoots grow.

Fortunes Told on Os-Bones

The Bronze age Chinese predicted future events or tried to learn the outcome of their plans by consulting their ancestors. To do so they inscribed a question on the shoulder bone of an ox or on a piece of tortoise-shell. Then they applied heat to the other side of the bone. This produced a crack upon the face. The direction in which the crack ran was believed to indicate a positive or negative answer to the query. It is due to this practice of divination, known as scapulimancy, that we know as much as we do about the Shang people at An-yang, because great piles of used oracle bones have been discovered and translated. Thus we know what the Shang people worried about, and what was foremost in their minds. The Black Pottery people also practiced scapulimancy in a primitive form.

Some of the "debris" the Germans left behind in Russia were their own dead.

PAST AND PRESENT

(From Michael Drayton's (English Poems)

I remember, I remember
The house where I was born,
The little window where the sun
Came peeping in at morn;
He never came a wink too soon
Nor brought too long a day;
But now I often wish the night
Had borne my breath away.

I remember, I remember
The roses, red and white,
The violets, and the lily cups—
Those flowers made of light!
The blaes where the robin built,
And where my brother set
The laburnum on his birth-day,
The tree is living yet!

I remember, I remember
Where I used to swing,
And thought the air must rush as fresh
To swallows on the wing;
My spirits flew in feathers then
That is not heavy now;
The summer pools could hardly cool
The fever on my brow.

I remember, I remember
The fir trees dark and high;
I used to think their slender tops
Were close against the sky;
It was a childish ignorance,
But now 'tis little joy
To know I'm farther off from heaven
Than when I was a boy.
