JOURNALISM IS THE THIRD ESTATE

American newspapers have long accepted without question a laurel wreath for "the Fourth Estate." Few people seemed to know that this term, originated long ago, was used to ridicule the Lords, but that it has gradually been accepted as a compliment. Times. Eventually the press as a whole accepted it as a compliment

A couple of live wire American journalists thinks third in importance that in "the estates of the realm" are the Commons, the Lords and the text fourth."

In welcoming David Hinshaw to the platform of the Pulitzer School of Journalism of Columbia University, Dean Carl W. Ackerman stated that "he is a man of wide experience in public affairs . . . who has served Governors, and other high public officials, although he has repeatedly declined appointment to public offices because of his interest in service rather than in rewards."

The reasons why journalism should be recognized as "Today's Fourth Estate" was explained by Mr. Hinshaw and ideals to the shores of high adventure of sending American ideas and ideals to the shores of the seven seas are just as Yankee Clipper captains and crews thrilled the seven seas are just as our Yankee Clipper captains and crews thrilled the nation and the world with their ability to carry American goods He wisely holds that it should refer to the future as well as the past, and should consist in a real turning from past misdeeds to a better life. He argues that it should be vitally related to the bringing in of the kingdom of God on earth. He developed a rather psychological interpretation of repentance and holds that it is a pilgrimage from the mind of the flesh to the kind of Christ. He develops this thesis by a careful scholarly study of the Gospels and of the entire New Testament. As the reader can see this is no mere academic discussion of a theme which should interest every class of reader. If we are ever to have a better world, free from the barbarisms of the present hour of mind with individuals and nations must come to know and to practice the principles of Christ as set forth in the Sermon on the Mount.

NEWSPAPERS

Newspapers are the only agencies that reflect every phase of human activity. They gather, edit, print and distribute the public events of the day. They are the only agencies that bring to the public the news of the world. They are the only agencies that bring to the public the news of the world.
