Interesting Exhibits On U. of K. Campus

Where farmers see a possibility of feed shortage the Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics suggests that considerations be given to making silage from sharecrops, alfalfa and other forage crops. Farmers who have silos might fill them now with grass and alfalfa, and in the fall dig trench silos for their usual corn silage crop.

In comparison with hay, grass silage is considered to have superior feeding value. Making silage out of grass or alfalfa eliminates the danger of loss from rain, which is worth considering at this time of the year.

The fact that molasses and phosphoric acid cannot be had this year need not keep farmers from putting grass and other crops in the silo. Corn meal or corn and cob meal can be used instead. Most of the feeding value of the corn used is retained in the silage.

Another way to eliminate the need of a preservative, in making silage out of forage crops, is to let them cure to some extent in the field. Fine-stemmed crops, such as bluegrass require no more than one hour of wilting in bright sunshine before they reach the proper moisture content. Thicker-stemmed or resulting stage. Thicker-stemmed crops, such as alfalfa, red clover, sweet clover, or soybeans, require two to four hours of drying, depending on their state of maturity, the intensity of the sun, the temperature and the humidity.

Silos designed for corn silage must be reinforced before they can safely be filled with grass silage. Through settling and tight fame. Through settling and tight doors are especially important when no preservative is used.

EDITORIAL

SALUTATORY

It is with a deep feeling of responsibility that I assume control of The Mercury as Editor and Publisher, since I have been personally at least two of the former Editors, Major George Gaunce, U. S. Army, and the late Warren Fisher, who now rest peacefully. I have leased the entire plant for a definite period from the owner, Mrs. Warren Fisher, and with this issue the business is placed in my possession and I crave the continued support the people, business firms and professional interests of Carlisle and Nicholas county have given this paper, in the long and successful history.

I promise the readers of The Mercury that it will be my constant endeavor to give you a good newsy paper each issue and improvements in its general make-up and news content. If this is possible, I hope to make The Mercury more interesting from time to time and so write and arrange the news that it will be easy for the reader to become informed about the happenings particularly in this county and neighborhood and neighbors in this section of the state.

More will be said in these columns in the future regarding our responsibility to the people and the functions of a county newspaper, especially the functions of The Mercury in the "Little town with a big heart."

I solicit your indulgence as progress is attempted and knowing that you are the big-hearted people that you have the reputation of being, I am confident that will stand with me in any effort made to uphold the good name of this community and I promise faithfully to commend the good wherever and whenever found and to abhor evil and disloyalty with all the force and power within me.

My first desire is to meet all the people of Carlisle, some of whom I have known for several years and as many in the county as possible as soon as convenient.

Readers are invited to call at The Mercury office and let's get acquainted.

Tentative arrangements have been made for all the present mechanical force and news staff to remain with The Mercury and so far as possible will continue in their present capacities indefinitely. I am happy to know. This efficient and loyal group of assistants will co-operate with me.

Mrs. S. W. Keller, society and personal news, who has been connected with The Mercury in one way or another all her business life. Mrs. Lewis Robbins has city news department who is rapidly developing into a real newsgatherer. Mr. Wilmark Turner, superintendent of overhead and job department with Mrs. Perry Mark, pecter and pressman, who has been with The Mercury more than 20 years and he knows his job, too.

Consider Silage And Forage Crops

Men in the armed services would rather read about what their families are doing, in the letters they get from home than any other kind of news, the Office of War Information said today after a survey among men in the service at home and overseas in cooperation with the Special Service Division of the Army Service Forces.

Men back from fighting fronts in Africa and the Southwest Pacific reported how mail from home—the right kind of mail—is one of the most vital factors in building and sustaining morale.

At one station overseas, ill men, representative of enlisted men in the station, were asked "What kind of things do you like to read about in your letters from home?" An examination of answers showed:

(B) Soldiers like to hear news letters about their families, including information concerning the following:

1. How the family is getting along economically.
2. That the family is doing everything possible to aid the war effort.
2. That the family is anxious for the boy's return.
4. That the family is "okay and busy."

(B) Soldiers like to head news letters about their friends and those in the service. Information in this category includes:

1. Girls he knows if they are single.
2. News about friends at home
3. Changes in social relations of friends and neighbors.
4. Past events, places he used to go and the community's "night life."

(C) Soldiers like to hear news about home towns such as:

1. General happenings
2. General gossip
3. Sports especially the home teams.
4. Present conditions reflect the war is having on the home town, rationing, business, etc.

There was a man in our town,
And he was wondrous wise,
He jumped in a hot cross bun
He would not advertise.
But one day he did advertise,
And thereby hangs a tale.
The "ad" was set in type quite small,
And headed "Sheriff's Sale."

PROTEIN NEEDED IN BALANCED FEEDING

That malnutrition might result from the lack of good protein foods and the warning of Miss Florence Imlay, foods specialist at the Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics. With limited ration points, it is important that homemakers plan every meal carefully, then double check to be sure a sufficient amount of lean meat cheese milk or eggs are included. Lack of these foods will cause weak, flabby muscles resulting in lowered production on the farm, or in the factory or home.

To stretch those precious protein ration points, make frequent use of lean meat cuts which are not in first demand by the armed forces. Such cuts as rib ends and neck are least costly in both price and ration points, yet they supply the needed body building food. Use it in the place of meat and not the fat that builds muscle.

Then use generously of those good quality protein foods which are not rationed. Have cottage cheese as is or combine it with fruits or with vegetables as spinach or grated carrots, for a salad. Serve grated cheese on toast or with rice, cornmeal or macaroni for a hearty meal. Serve milk soup or a bean loaf with soybeans or black-eyed peas, both of which are high in protein. Use milk in cooking as well as to drink, and include fish and chicken in the week's menus.

BEEF RATION CUT

A general cut in civilian beef rations was announced by the War Food OPA prepared its monthly revision of red stamp point values.

The April ration will be cut about one-fifth, probably will show that the higher point values for most cuts of beef which means that red stamps will be worth less. However, the value of blue stamp values for the catered foods is expected at the present level.

No change of the new meat point values for pork products is believed likely that the present values for pork products will remain unchanged. Point values for canned meats, fish and poultry will be announced later.

In both canned or processed meats the point value will vary according to the amount of meat in the product. Thus canned meat with a high meat content will have a higher point value than a product with a low meat content.

SAYS WOMEN COULD HELP SOLVE FARM LABOR SITUATION

That a woman's land army could be of valuable assistance in the labor situation by doing certain jobs on Kentucky farms, was expressed by Miss Myrtle Weldon, state leader of home demonstration work. Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics. How great the need for women in agriculture in Kentucky will be is not yet fully apparent, but realizing that it will become more acute as the war continues. Miss Weldon said, "We hope to gain experience by placing a few women on farms in many counties in the state."

Experience in the truck gardens and dairy areas of the East, and fruit producing regions of the West, have proved that women can do certain jobs exceptionally well. Among these are planting, weeding, hoeing, spraying, picking, cleaning, bunching and packing of fruits and vegetables.

Almost everything connected with the care of poultry operations, milking machines, care of dairy barns, operation of separators, care of dairy equipment and care and feeding of livestock can be satisfactorily done by women. They can also be trained to do the operation of machinery. Miss Weldon said that women should be protected against jobs that are injurious to their health, such as heavy lifting pulling and stretching.

It is the opinion of the state leader that women in Kentucky will be more effective in commercial dairying on a poultry farm than in general farming and where these two enterprises are combined
