BIBLE THOUGHT THIS WEEK

And in every work that he began in the service of the house of God, and in the law, and in the commandments, to seek his God, he did it with all his heart, and prospered.-2 Chron. xxxi-21.

SOLVENCY BATTLE AHEAD

The fact that our citizens and industries are aware of the duties involved by failure on our part to devise equitable and far-reaching tax measures which apply to virtually every earned dollar and every sale of goods, in order to prevent our country being "bonded to death," is shown by the resolution recently adopted by the National Tax Conference, Associated State Chambers of Commerce. The resolution states:

"The Associated State Chambers of Commerce realize that as the existence of the nation depends on winning the war, the existence of democracy as we know it, our private enterprise and private property as we know it, depend on the ability of private enterprise and the people to pay for the war.

"Therefore, the Associated State Chambers of Commerce favor the highest possible taxes for business, industry, and the people as a whole, consistent with the preservation of enterprise in a strong and healthy condition and able to meet the continued heavy tax burden of the future, and consistent with maintaining the morale of the people.

"At the same time the Associated Chambers of Commerce go on record not only in favor of the elimination of every unnecessary governmental expense, but in favor of the elimination from every bill of any and all provisions which is aimed not for government revenue but for control of business and individuals, which is unnecessary, undesirable, and unfair and some of which provisions result in actual loss of revenue to the Treasury.

"Highest possible taxation for revenue only, under full-fledged tax policies, which will permit the existence of a strong and healthy American enterprise system, is the only hope, now and in the post-war years, of a free and democratic America of continued employment for those able and willing to work, and of a vibrant America."

Government price fixing policies are blamed for wide fluctuations in farm income, both as between products and different regions of the country. Income from some products has soared, while income from others has fallen only slightly. Costs of producing all farm products have shown large increases.

But the farmer has worked long hours and kept up production under handicaps and inequalities which would have been considered ruinous to far less essential war activity. The American farmer does not plan his total production effort on a wage and hour basis—he still produces as an independent citizen who is trying to save his independent way of living even if he has to work longer and make less than those who produce only for a "price."

THE PHILOSOPHY OF CONFUSION

Low and medium priced storekeepers from crossroads and Main streets have joined in complaints to OPA against its orders freezing them to sales of women's and children's wearing apparel at prices no higher than their top lines in March, 1942, when they can no longer stock their shelves at 1942 prices.

They are forced to see their old customers buy from competitors who were not in the low-priced apparel field two years ago and are therefore not subject to the March, 1942, Highest Price Line Limitation Order, and can buy and sell at current prices.

No philosopher in OPA has yet explained this unexplainable ruling.

COAL MINING UP TO DATE

Most people think of coal mining as a pick and shovel operation. As a matter of fact, modern methods and devices have revolutionized coal mining. Air conditioning, mechanical load and hauling, and safety of battery-stored electricity for power head a list of many beneficial changes.

In a modern bituminous coal mine, raw coal becomes a factory product, tailor made to meet today's numerous, strict customer requirements.

After the coal is blasted and loaded it goes by train up a slope to a dump dump which automatically empties the cars. It then goes to the tipple or processing plant which is really a modern coal factory where coal is sorted, blended, and laundered. Impurities are disposed of and the clean, washed coal is oil treated to eliminate dust. Various sizes are blended to make possible delivery of any required mixture to home or industry.

From its fifty-million-year resting place to the railroad car, coal is hardly touched by hand in the modern bituminous mine. Machines has done most of the work and taken the ancient, black-breaking toil out of mining. This is how modern mines, with fewer men, have produced record-breaking quantities of coal to meet every war need.

UP AT THE FRONT

No industry is more alive to the need for progressive postwar policies than is railroading, judged by the advertising the nation's railways are running which picture the many conveniences planned for passengers after the war.

It is easy to see that the railroads intend to do everything in their power to make transportation by rail as efficient and pleasurable as possible.

They intend to develop their particular field of transportation to the maximum in order to render the greatest public service. Main line trains will move faster and more frequently. More comfort and luxuries will be provided in deluxe-car accommodations. Express and freight traffic will be given the special needs of shippers and travelers.

Railways have made a much different war job by far than they had done what the railroads did in the out-set of the present World War. Communications and preparation before the attack during the week will be made and the Sunday evening service at 8:00 until further notice.

Rev. H. P. McClure will preach this Sunday and hold our Third Quarterly Conference.

The World At War
No. 123
By Charles M. Knapp,
Professor of History,
University of Kentucky

This past week except in the Mediterranean theater seems to have been one of relative quiet, of consolidations for larger efforts and more important actions to come. Not even the amazing Russian armies have been able to report more than that they were closing the ring around the Black Sea Crimean port of Sevastopol. Nevertheless, it is certainly a glorious and heavy fighting upon all the battlefronts, even though it was not productive of spectacular victories.

EUROPEAN BATTLEFRONTS—About Sevastopol the Russian armies were tightening their grip on the key hills overlooking the city and the harbor. Planes and ill sorts of naval craft were blocking the port and attacking the ships and barges on which the German garrison was seeking desperately to escape by sea.

From both, however, came the report, which is entirely in keeping with the Russian strategy that large forces were being prepared for a strong offensive on the central and northern sectors of the eastern front. It is highly probable that the main drive on that offensive will be into old Poland, toward Lwow and not to the north of the Pothills of the Carpathians.

THE INVASION PRELIMINARIES: The Anglo-American high command last week wanted the Germans across the Channel in France, Belgium and the Netherlands, to believe that the long expected invasion of the continent, from England, was imminent. The larger areas of southern England were placed within a restricted, military zone which visitors were prohibited from traveling. Diplomatic representatives of neutral countries, residing in England, were prohibited from leaving or communicating with their capitals. Home governments except under the most rigid censorship, were left in the diplomatic code of the British Foreign Office, through British embassies in their own countries, which would decode the message and transmit it to the foreign secretary. Such an unusual procedure was to be followed only under circumstances which would suggest that there was important action on hand.

The British would not want to have reported abroad, by the British press, that the continent has been centered recently upon the invasion coast defense area and upon communication and transport facilities in France, western Germany and Belgium. Reports have passed the censors which have been interpreted as indicating that battleships were bombarding the coasts at various places There can be little doubt that the date of the invasion is approaching and there is also reason to believe that the Russian offensive which old Poland will be timed to correspond with the invasion operations in the west.

THE SOUTHWESTERN PACIFIC: The best news to come from this area in weeks was that which released Sunday night that General MacArthur's forces had landed, under naval and air support, near Hollandia, some 500 miles west of the western end of the northern coast of New Guinea than the Japanese mainland position opposite New Britain. Details are as yet lacking, but the objective apparently is to give there airfields near Hollandia that the movement was a complete surprise, because it was supposed neither by air nor naval craft. Elsewhere in the Pacific, the air and naval warfare under Admiral Nimitz' direction has followed the same patterns of raid by surface craft and long-range bombers.

IMPERMANENCE

The red-bud flickers and goes out;
The flames of early maples die;
Syringa blossoms take the wind
Like little white-winged birds and fly.

So soon will melt away like mist
The dogwood clouds upon the hills,
A splendid season will disperse
My legacy of daffodils.

The gayest tulips will forget
All that they know of gold and red;
And people can but walk across
The carpet of a circus bed.

Forsythias and japonica
Glimmer today, domorrow pass,
Even the youngest apple tree
Must lay its beauty on the grass.

O Spring, uplist a sturdier house.
And not this flimsy, transient tent
That April shadows, leaving me
Bereft, and wondering where he went
