BIBLE THOUGHT THIS WEEK

Thou therefore endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. 2 Tim. 11. 3

"Where our Captain bids us go 'Tis not ours to murmur, "No."
He that gives the swors and shield,
Chooses too the battle field
On which we are to fight the foe"
Anonymous

VOLUME LXXVIII; NO. 1

With this issue The Mercury begins the seventy-eighth year of its existence. The Mercury came into existence the first week of the year 78 years ago and has successfully carried on the publication of volume 77. Friends have stood by the paper and, though many who were "first subscribers" have passed on, The Mercury has continued to visit the homes of these first supporters bringing the weekly news happenings of this section of the state, and numerous homes would greatly miss its regular visits should anything occur to disrupt the regular issues of the paper.

The new year is a venture at a time when world history is in the making and some of the greatest undertakings will be experienced in the year in the history of the human race. It is a venture, with our sons on the battle-fronts, that requires all the fortitude and prayers of mothers and fathers and the full duty of every citizen in backing up those boys of ours.

We know not what the future holds. Let's have faith, work hard; pray fervently and hope for early victory—this is the paramount issue of the day—other things are secondary.

Your continued support in backing up the Mercury staff will be appreciated as much now as any time in its history.

ASHES MAKE POOR GUNPOWDER

Under the stark title of "Ashes Make Poor Gunpowder," the fire insurance industry has released a booklet that cites a few of the activities the fire insurance companies are conducting in this war in addition to selling fire insurance. Heading those activities is fire prevention.

An army of fire prevention engineers maintained by the fire insurance industry and with years of training in scientific fire prevention, is now working to prevent fire destruction in vital war establishments. To protect the Army, an advisory fire protection bureau is maintained in the War Department at insurance company expense. A force of engineers is working full time on such projects as Army cantonments, training centers, hospitals, and supply depots. They are inspecting and preparing fire prevention standards for thousands of these projects—helping to save lives and speed the war effort. A similar bureau is serving the Navy. And with the Coast Guard in more than 100 ports the safest the country another group of engineers is helping to see that piers, wharves, and war material and equipment awaiting there for shipment are not damaged or destroyed by fire. Still another group is working to prevent fire in industrial plants. Each of all of them are vast research organizations supported by the insurance industry.

The full scope of the fire prevention work of insurance is as fast flung as its value is unmeasurable.

WORSE THAN INFLATION

There are worse things than inflation. One is government tyranny, which can occur when people fear inflation more than they love freedom. We have reached the point in this country where fear of inflation is tending to force us toward tyranny. We may not be able to avoid inflation. It is the price of war. But we can avoid tyranny. The present rebellion against subsidies is an encouraging indication that the American people prefer to take their inflation straight. Subsidies would open the door to total government control of the private citizen.

The general attitude toward subsidies was aptly expressed by Fred H. Sexauer, President of the Sexauer Fertilizer Cooperative Association, when he said: "The last bulwark of freedom of our independent business may fall if the plan of subsidy in place of fair price now in process of application is put over as a permanent program.

. . . Subsidies are used to bring about compliance by individuals with bureaucratic demands. The broad powers placed in the hands of more or less irresponsible subordinates to write the conditions on which subsidy payments will be made leads to the temptation to include restrictions on individual initiative and compulsory subservience in matters only distantly relating to subsidies themselves. Subsidies will end investment production to the extent that equivalent prices would."

TAXES AFTER THE WAR

The problem of postwar business taxation cannot longer be shoved safely aside. It involves the jobs, standard of living, even the freedom of the people. That it has been almost wholly ignored to date is attributed to the common assumption clearly stated by Harley L. Lutz, professor of finance, of Princeton University, that business can and will continue to supply the goods and services upon which all services depend for the good life, regardless of the drag and drain of excessive taxation.

But that assumption has been encouraged by the ability of industry to produce during the war, not withstanding a confiscatory level. People are prone to forget that the business man is the foremost a patriot. For the duration, the incentive of patriotism has in many cases replaced the incentive of profit as a production stimulant. After the war, business men cannot be expected to act any differently than other groups. The nation's productive talent will work best if it sees a hope of fair reward.

Vice President Wallace fully realized this when he was moved to remark recently that "Our whole tax structure, including individual income, capital gains and corporate taxes, will need revising to stimulate maximum production and employment."

NEW CALENDAR

I've thrown away a calendar
With numbers printed red and black,
And all the days of all the year
Lie buried in a little stack.

Yes, every kind of day was there;
Some golden bright, some dark with pain,
A't intertwined with silver nights
Where women rode high to wax and wane.

I've hung up a brand-new calendar
To fill the days of one more year.
And no one knows what they may hold
Of things we love, of things we fear.

There will be days to bring new life,
And other days when life will cease;
Dear God, we pray that one day soon
Be marked to bring world peace.

Fourth War Loan Drive Jan. 18.

A Londoner in New York:

This is the voice of a friendly alien. I've been reporting this United Nations' war since September, 1939. But first thing I had to do when I sought permission to visit U. S. A. was fill out form for aliens This peacetime form is all rules and a yard wide, full of highly personal, cryptic questions. It floored me. Only two questions I'm certain I answered correctly were could I read and was I masculine. Very asked me also if I'd ever been in prison. This was a question I asked days when I went often to Germany the formalities were never so much and I'd never been called an alien. It seemed a symbol of our life and times that you and we, so six I believed fundamentally alike in thought and aspiration, should have to maintain barriers to association and understanding.

Symbol of our times, too, I never saw Liberty as we gleamed upriver. Liberty passed by as I was answering an FBI quiz. Very efficient and very courteous those FBI men, but the gulf over Liberty seemed to me less thorough for being so friendly. Is it too much to hope that one day we the American and British people may share common citizenship in each other's country? That would be a war aim. It might even prevent World War III.

I was entirely unprepared for New York. Years spent in the jungles of Burma and on the vasty deserts of Egypt, Libya and Palestine were poor training grounds for this exhilarating city. I'm not exactly shy but the natives are friendly. Everything I've ever read in books is true but I was surprised at its smooth, velvety texture and the sweetness of the inhabitants; not surprised at its fascinating window displays, its high prices, its "Don't walk on the grass, damn little for a dollar" attitude, London has nothing of New York's esprit or character. Paris had, a little; the same sense of gaiety, the smell of gasoline, same gusts of warm air sweeping down the city's many transient trees. Nostalgia broke over me like a wave at night of those Parisian streets, recalling Paris Maytime in 1940.

Sydney has something of New York, and Melbourne, and Cairo, and Algiers, its hamburger heavens and gay, gaudy and swift taxicabs. New York's women and Paris's have certain kinship, too. The skilful makeup, little dabs of rouge and well-shod feet. (I am not disloyal to you, you gallant British women who fill our factories, clean our streets and serve in the Land Army. Avenue makers in uniform are rarer than on London's Piccadilly. But those I saw were of the same glance. Unlike British women's service uniforms, seemingly designed by repressed spinsters as revenge on easy sex, US women's uniforms are chic, feminine, frequently fantastique. Perhaps occasionally as you trap fanciers devised more for front-row cinemas than for frontline use. There's something to be said for ugly uniforms: those who wear them wear them must be pure patriots.

A New York girl asked me: "I suppose you must resent our remote-ness from actual war, and seeing buildings unscarred, coming as you do from Britain and the real front-line?" But of course not! Because my home is shattered and my people killed should I wish the same fate for others? No Britisher does. As they stroll on Fifth Avenue in gaths they feel like me, that it's good to be alive still to find unexpected loveliness and beauty in peacetime proportions."

Enabled I spotted Jack Benny, Una Merkel, Billy Rose, and some lesser aristocrats. Walter Winchell was there, too, doing his homework. I was quite prepared to dislike Winchell. (It's the human thing to resent success in others.) I did not expect to meet a starry-eyed youth, but Winchell was much less sophisticate than I'd imagined. Maybe it's true what they say that every New York columnist yearns to be a farmer's boy.

Lunch-talking the other day I pleaded for postwar common cith-renship for British and US peoples. Someone cracked: "Abolish The British want America back." But what with the jungly heat, the mid-ers' strike, the Roosvelt versus Congress issue, the food wrangle and the race riots, America was no gift just then. And in Britain right now we've troubles enough of our own.

Talking to an intelligent New Yorker about the United Nations' air assault on Germany these days I referred to the air Battle of Britain. He had never heard of it. I told him it was the Battle of America under another name . . . . Except that chops and steaks are elusive, New York doesn't show signs of war privations. But war isn't merely doing without things, war is heartbreak, personal loneliness, for those left behind. For lifetime soldiers it is short periods of intense fear, long periods of jetense boredom.

ALMOST SLIPPED

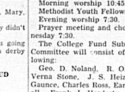
At the breakfast table he was relating to his wife an incident that had occurred at the club the previous night. The chairman had offered his derby hat to the member who could tell the most ungodly truthful say that during his married life he had never kissed any woman but his wife.

"And would you believe it, Mary, no one stood up!"

"George," said Mary, "why didn't you stand up?"

"Well," he replied, "I was going to, but I took so awful as a derby hat."

FOR CRYING OUT LOUD



Explorer—In the Arctic. Eskimos live on caribou and blubber.

Sweet Thing—Well, if I had to eat candles, I would too.

Disciplinarian

Before the war a man traveling in Palestine learned of an addition to his family circle. The happy father immediately provided himself with some outer boxes for strain in carrying home for the christening.

He then called a specialist for the ceremony he presented himself at the appointed hour and knocked on the door in order to announce over the precious water. He pulled the flask out of the box, but the minister held up a warning hand and came over in a whisper:

"My dear fellow, you really shouldn't drink here in the church!"

Rationed Love Song

I never sausage eyes as thine,
And if you'll butcher hands in mine
And liver 'round me every day,
I'll never want a better lard for away
Until meat life's trown with love's cares
Abetwer read that points to happiness.

Repairs Deferred

Hubby—Why haven't you mended these holes in my sock?

Wifey—You didn't buy that fur coat I wanted. So I figured if you didn't give a wrap, I didn't give a darn.

Self Explanatory

Joe—Why is it you won't marry me?
Jane—Now think real hard.
Joe—I can't think.
Jane—That's the reason!

Bragging?

Tom—I'm at the bottom of my profession.
Jerry—You mean the top, don't you?
Tom—No, I'm a coal miner.

Clear Courette

Bill—Don't you think I look neater since I've had my mustache removed?

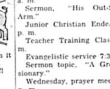
Betty—Well, that block could stand an alley.

Natural Advantages

Joe—My ambition is to be a great man. I want to become a public specialist.

Jerry—Well, you have a good head for it.

HAM TO YOU



Bill—What is a pig doing when it is eating?

Will—Making a hog of himself!

Bad Substitute

Uncle—Now isn't that a nice ride on my knee?

Nephew—Yeah, but I'd much rather ride a real donkey!

And Solid, Too

Joe—Mabel's head is like a door knob.

Moe—What do you meant?

Joe—Any man can turn it.

More Accurate, Too

Burglar—Let's figure up and see how much we made on Cain haul.

Second—I'm tired. Let's wait and look in the morning paper.

Really Farsighted

Officer—Have you any preference as to what you'd like to be?
Draftee—Alive! An eyesight man with a pension.

Between Us Girls

Jane—I'm surprised at you. You gave my secret away.

Janet—I didn't give it away. I exchanged it for a better one.

Fair Exchange

Him—Here's the candy, dear—sweets to the sweet.

Her—Thanks, darling. May I pass you the nuts?

No News

Smith—My doctor tells me I can't play golf.

Brown—So he's played with you, too.

HOME NURSING CARE IN INFLUENZA: PREVENTIVE MEDICINE AND HYGIENE

Mrs. John Lee, Red Cross Instructor of home nursing, has received the following information on the home care of influenza:

No other disease is more disabling to community life, for the reason that so many are placed on the non-effective list at the same time; there is a shortage of doctors and nurses; hospital facilities are inadequate.

We are in the midst of an epidemic of a mild type of influenza. To avoid a feeling of panic, it is well to point out that uncomplicated influenza of the present type is of short duration, and that great advances have been made in making available effective treatment for cases with serious complications.

I. Home Nursing Care Of Influenza. Important factors in care and control.

A. Skilful nursing care for the recovery of the sick person and the prevention of spread of the disease to others in the family, and in the community, are the first objectives.

1. Combination of symptoms likely to occur
a. Sudden onset
b. Fever with chilly sensations
c. Severe aching—head, back and extremities
d. Symptoms of "common cold" such as eyes, runny nose, sore throat
e. Cough
f. Severe prostration
2. Important things for the home nurse to do
a. Set apart the first case at home for recognition possible, to reduce the possibility of a house epidemic.
b. Keep the patient in bed as long as fever persists. This conserves the patient and aids in the control of the disease by keeping the patient out of circulation.
c. Record pulse, temperature and respiration every four hours and note any special character of pulse or respiration.
d. Avoid chilling—keep warm.
e. Give ample fluids.
f. Dispose of sputum and throat discharges by burning or boiling. Destroy the dressings that cover the mouth and nose of the patient will carry the infection to others.
g. Avoid the cough and sneeze of the patient. Instruct the patient to cover mouth and nose when coughing or sneezing. The mode of transmission is believed to be by direct contact with droplets or articles freshly contaminated by nose and throat discharges of the patient.
h. Wash your hands after you have given care to the patient.
3. Danger signals
a. Fever beyond three days
b. Cough with foul-smelling sputum
c. Earache
d. Persistent drowsiness
e. Persistent nosebleed
f. A possible complication is
a. Middle ear infection.
b. Acute sinusitis
c. Bronchitis
d. Pneumonia
e. Lung abscess
B. Local health department recommends that be thoroughly understood and strictly followed: Influenza spreads very rapidly in crowds.

C. A physician should be consulted either by telephone or visitation.

Deaths

ROBINSON

Mrs. Bessie Redmon Robinson, 67, widow of J. B. Robinson, died Friday at the home of her father, Joseph Redmon, with whom she resided in Paris.

She was a native of Bourbon county and had been a lifelong resident there. Besides her father, one brother, Joe Perry Redmon, survives. Also several nieces, Mrs. Bruce Sharp, Sharpsburg, and Miss Margaret Redmon, Bourbon county.

Mrs. Robinson is well known in Carlisle where she has often visited relatives.

HENRY

Mrs. J. W. Henry died at 9 o'clock Saturday morning at her home on Eastern Avenue, after an illness of several weeks. She was before her marriage, Miss Sallie Hawthrig, daughter of W. C. Hawthrig, and Louisa Crayeraft Hawthrig, pioneer residents of Nicholas county.

In 1880 she was united in marriage to John W. Henry who preceeded her to the grave twenty-one years ago.

Surviving are three daughters, Mrs. H. M. Stauffer, of Santa Barbara, California; Miss Lida Henry and Mrs. Ben Alexander of this city; five grandchildren, Mrs. Richard C. Stewart and Mrs. Palmer Smart, of Carlisle; Mrs. Francis Peeler, Santa Barbara, California; Donald Stansifer, Bean Field, California; Pvt. John G. Irvin, U. S. Army; three great-grandchildren, and two brothers, Thomas H and Walter P. Hawthrig, of Carlisle.

Funeral services were held at the home at 3 p. m. Sunday, January 2 by Rev. LaVerne Taylor, pastor of the Carlisle Christian church, of which she was a member. Burial was in the Carlisle cemetery.

TINSLEY

Mrs. L. B. Holmes, of Moorefield, received word from her sister, Mrs. T. S. Tinsley, of Brooklyn, N. Y., that her son, Timothy Tinsley, had died suddenly from a heart attack, on Thursday, December 23. He was stricken on a city bus and died at a hospital shortly after. His father, a minister of the Christian church in Brooklyn, died about a year ago, and his burial was in the Carlisle cemetery. After his death, for several months, Timothy filled the pulpit of his church, but at the time of his death was engaged in Brotherhood work.

Besides his mother, he is survived by his wife, a son, and two sisters.

The remains were cremated.

BARR

Funeral services for Miss Jeannette Barr, daughter of Mrs. A. J. Barr and the late Mr. Barr, who died last Wednesday afternoon, were held at her home Friday afternoon at 2:30. Rev.
