BIBLE THOUGHT THIS WEEK

The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even for evermore.—Ps. CXXI. 8.

"With grateful hearts the past we own;
The future, all to us unknown,
We to Thy guardian care commit,
And peaceful leave before Thy feet."
—P. Dodridge

BOOM ON SMALL TOBACCO MARKETS

The current boom on many of Kentucky's smaller tobacco markets is seen by some observers as the beginning of a trend which holds great promise for all small cities in the state.

Although the boom on smaller burley markets has not been given much publicity, the fact remains that the most significant development of the pre-Christmas tobacco sales in Kentucky, other than the increase in prices, was the "swing" to the smaller markets. During the first two weeks of the current sales season the number of pounds sold on Kentucky's burley markets increased a decline of 29 per cent from the volume sold during the first two weeks last season. However, most of this decline was on the larger markets. Several of the smaller markets actually sold more pounds in the first two weeks of December 1943 than they did during the corresponding period of December 1942. Other small markets sold approximately the same number of pounds last month as they did in December 1942, but this meant that they actually were selling a larger share of the burley crop than they did a year ago.

For those not familiar with farming and tobacco sales, it should be explained that the decline in volume of early sales this season is not a result of a decrease in the size of the burley crop. The current crop is larger than that of a year ago, but weather conditions have retarded delivery to market.

The point is this:

The smaller markets are getting a lot of tobacco which went to the big markets a year ago.

Why?

First, the combination of ceiling prices and the fact that tobacco consumption is running ahead of production. Buyers need all the tobacco, they are paying ceiling prices on all markets—the same prices on all markets. Once they were inclined to pay more on big markets where they maintained redryers and storage houses and hence could handle leaf at less expense and with less trouble. Now, with buyers paying the same prices everywhere, growers naturally are selling at the market nearest home.

Second, truck operators are limited as to gasoline and tires and this condition discourages long trips to big markets. Growers who do their own hauling especially are avoiding extra mileage and extra hours away from the farm where frequently the tobacco grower, in these days of labor shortage, is doing the milking and other chores.

"The early sales give every indication that this season will be one of the best—probably the best—for most of Kentucky's smaller burley markets.

While it is easy to see that the smaller-market cities are benefited by these conditions, what is the basis of the observation in it they promise benefits to many of Kentucky's smaller cities which do not have tobacco markets? A man who believes that all small cities in Kentucky have an opportunity to gain explains his belief this way:

"I live in a county which has no tobacco market, but has many growers. Most of our farmers formerly hauled tobacco 50 miles to market. Now they haul it 10 miles. They don't spend as much on their tobacco-selling trips and spend more in our town.

"More important is this: The gasoline shortage is keeping our people at home and it will keep them at home for many a day. This war is putting a terrific strain on our natural resources and I expect to see gasoline rationing during the early part of the post-war period as well as during the fighting days. This rationing will be necessary until we get into gear again in America. If the smaller cities sell themselves to the home folks—there's own town folks and their own county folks—during this period they will hold permanently a lot of the business that was going elsewhere before the war."

The World At War

By Charles M. Knapp,
Professor of History,
University of Kentucky

Interest this past week has centered in great Russian offensives which have been driving westward in the Dnieper and Bug Rivers, and in the preparations in England for an invasion of the continent. Military and civilian commentators are agitated that the most propitious time for an invasion of the Continent from English and Mediterranean bases will be at the moment of greatest Russian pressure on the eastern European front. Therefore, speculation as to the date of the Anglo-American invasions has overshadowed the events which have been taking place on the eastern front. Since it is agreed that the Russian offensives must terminate when the spring thaws convert the whole eastern front into a sea of mud and that the thaws will commence in the south late in March and some weeks later in White Russia and around Leningrad, most commentators believe that the date for the western invasion must be sometime within the next four to six weeks. If the invasion from England does start at that time, it is unlikely that it will be attempted until the ground will be hard again in June on the Russo-German front. The consensus of opinion is that the crisis for the German armies in the Dnieper bend will come within the next thirty days or less. The best opinion now is that the Russians have perhaps a 20 per cent superiority in manpower and equipment over the Germans on the eastern front, that their reserves on that front have been moved westward to meet the threat of invasion in the Balkans, in southern France and along the Atlantic coast. For months the Russians are reported to have been urging invasion from the west, pointing out that action there would place so great a strain upon German manpower and equipment that landings in the west would prove to be relatively easy or that the Russian armies would be able to speedily crush the German resistance on the long eastern front. The announcement of the commanders selected to lead the invasion operation from the English coast last week and today the announcement that a date for the invasion had been set, lends strength to the Russian argument and to the belief that the Anglo-American invasion will start within the next few weeks. The many heavy shields of the past three weeks on the area behind Calais, just across the Strait of Dover, again has suggested that the targets have not been the rumored German rocket bases but the coastal defenses and the railways and highways over which the Germans must counter-attack the Allied beach heads. It is impossible to believe that across-channel invasion will be an isolated operation. The expectation is rather that Italian ports on the Adriatic will be the bases for an invasion of Albania and the Balkans, and that Sicily and North Africa will be the bases for an invasion of southern France near the mouth of the Rhone River, and that the Turkish army will invade Bulgaria from European Turkey with British support from Syria. Opportunity is knocking at the Allies door and if it can be seized this winter, an early victory in Europe may well be within battery grasp.

For a week the Russian armies have been pressing encircling movements against the Germans within the Dnieper bend below Kiev, and in driving to cut the last rail lines between the German front lines and the Carpathian mountains in pre-war eastern Poland. In doing so they will have crossed the upper Bug River and outflanked the German lines on the Bug and Dniester Rivers, and opened the way for an invasion of Rumania. There is reasonably possible that the whole German position in the Balkans may blow up. Their Allies there are already sick of the war.

THE SOUTH PACIFIC: The American positions on New Britain have been consolidated this week. From Allied airfields bombers have raided Japanese airfields and supply ships and barges moving along the island coast. In the air the Allies now have definite air superiority as well as naval superiority throughout the Southwest Pacific islands.

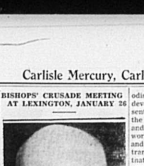
BISHOPS' CRUSADE MEETING AT LEXINGTON, JANUARY 26



BISHOP J. LLOYD DECELL

Visiting seventy-six principal cities, in every part of the United States, twenty-two teams of Methodist bishops and ministerial leaders will hold city-wide and conference-wide mass meetings during January. The meetings will mark the beginning of "The Crusade for a New World Order" under the auspices of the Council of Bishops of the Methodist Church. A special committee of the bishops, headed by Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, of Boston, is in charge of the Crusade which is popularly known as "The Bishops' Crusade".

The Crusade meeting for the Kentucky Conference will be held on Wednesday, January 26, in Lexington, Kentucky. Methodist afternoon meetings will be held at Centenary Methodist Church on Broadway and the night meeting will be held at First Methodist Church on Main street, near Upper.

Bishop U. V. W. Darlington will preside at all the meetings. It is expected that the enemies Crusade, for which he will carry on over a period of three months, will culminate in a "Day of Consecration" on Sunday, March 26. At this time the ministers of all local Methodist churches will be asked to dedicate themselves to "The Coming Peace" and Bishop H. Lester Smith of Cincinnati, on "The Prince of Peace"

"The Coming Peace and the Prince of Peace" is the central theme of these mass meetings and of the entire Crusade. The renowned artist, Howard Chandler Christy, has painted a new portrait of the Christ, symbolizing the theme, and the painting has been reproduced in a Crusade poster in the original colors. It has been widely acclaimed for the striking manner in which strength and purpose depicted in the face and body of Christ.

Those who attend the Crusade meetings can obtain, free of charge, postcard-size reproductions of the painting to send to friends in the armed services.

Speaking of the plans for the Crusade, Bishop Oxnam said: "The Crusade for a New World Order is a movement within the Methodist Church which seems (1) to develop, clarify, and mobilize the sentiment of all the members of the Church in favor of a righteous and lasting peace and a Christian world, and against those attitudes and movements which are contrary to peace, and (2) to bring that body of sentiment and influence to bear at the place the decisions are made and before the decisions are made.

"The Christian forces must not wait until decisions are made and then protest if those decisions are not Christian.

"The general boards, commissions, and other agencies of the Church are cooperative with the Council of Bishops and have important parts to play. In general, the methods of the Crusade will involve the distribution of appropriate literature, 76 inspirational meetings in as many cities, and a follow-up movement through the conferences, districts, and churches which will include study of the Christian basis of peace and study groups and a home visitation which will carry the message of the Crusade to every Methodist household.

"In connection with this follow-up the people will be asked to write their senators to say all persons who may have a hand in shaping the peace, exercise their influence against a narrow and selfish isolationism in favor of a never-ending peace and the Christianization of the world."

LOCAL PERSONAL SOCIAL

THERE IS HOPE AHEAD

There is hope ahead! there are fair skies waiting
Where the heart will climb to the unveiled sun
When the world is through with bitter hating,
And war is done.

The light will shine from the mystic towers
Of darkened cities as night comes down;
The streets will blossom with fine flowers,
And far from town

Will be silver plows with bright shares turning
The furrowed lengths down the fragrant loam.
There will be home-sweet fires burning
For each home.
And children will play in grassy shovyards,
No longer tortured by fear and sadness,
There is hope ahead!

ALLIES DEVELOPED ROCKET WARPLANE

The New Secret "Jet-Propelled" Fighter Plane Is Operated Without Propellers

A new, secret "jet-propelled" fighter plane, without propellers has been perfected by the United States and Great Britain and will shortly be in production for both the British and American Air Forces, a joint statement of the American Army Air Force and the Royal Air Force said, according to a United Press report from London by Joseph W. Grieg.

The London Daily Mail said the planes probably would have a top speed of between 500 and 600 miles an hour.

Hundreds of successful flights have been made without accident in both the United States and Britain by the new planes, capable of flying at great speed at high altitude, the statement said.

Only a fragment of the story of a new and revolutionary plane propulsion system with the greatest advance in years in aviation, can be told now, but behind it lies 11 years of experiment and three and one-half years of careful, intensely secret development and test flying.

No details of performance or specification of the plane were made public, the statement said, the necessity for secrecy. But it was disclosed that the first test model produced in the United States by the Bell Aircraft Company was ready for test.

Sufficient jet planes for training purposes will be produced in the United States and Britain have now been built, the statement announced, and the Army Air Forces have ordered a number of the planes to the United States.

Credit for the engine which made possible the jet plane was given, in the statement, to British Group Capt. Frank Whittle. He began work on it in 1930, and in April 1937, had his engine running satisfactorily for the first time.

The first successful flight was made in May, 1941, by the late Flight Lt. P. G. Sayers, chief test pilot for the Gloster Aircraft Company, Ltd.

In July, 1941, the Royal Air Force was notified, information regarding the engine to Gen. H. H. Arnold, chief of the United American Air Forces, and at his request the engine which made the first flight was sent to the General Electric Company.

The statement said its first engine ready for test in less than a year.

The first test flight in the United States was made in April, 1942, by Robert M. Stanley, chief test pilot for the Bell Aircraft Company.

The jet plane first came into production in 1941 when Italy published details of an alleged successful jet propulsion plane. Germany, the statement said, had a plane took air in at the front of the fuselage, heated it and forced it out at the tail in such a way as to provide a propulsive thrust. The plane, called the Caproni-Campini CC2, had a cigar-shaped fuselage and no rudder toward the tail than in front. It flew from Milan to Rome.

On Aug. 29, 1941, it was reported that the Germans were developing a jet plane but the reports died down.
