BIBLE THOUGHT
THIS WEEK

Be strong, and of good courage, fear not, nor be afraid . . for the Lord thy God, He it is that doth go with thee; He will not fail thee, nor forsake thee.—Deut. XXXI 6

APPROACHING REALITY

In the words of Time magazine, "By the year's end . . . new taps in U. S. productive capacity stood as the best protection against inflation . . . ." Business managed industry will be as vital to the peace as it has been to the winning of the war.

A smooth working, highly productive, tax-paying system of private enterprise, beginning in the soil and carrying through to the consumer, has become an absolute necessity. Anything which restricts the operation of such a system is a direct threat to living standards and stability of government. It is the responsibility of public officials to do all in their power to prevent further imposition of restrictions and tax measures which obstruct production and clog distributive channels. Both of these evils have been rampant.

The distribution system both before and during the war has lost none of the recipient restrictions and punitive tax loss that have seriously impaired consumer service. Before the war, distributive efficiency was hard hit by anti-chain store taxes. Since the war fountains of regulations have been directed at retailers in the mistaken belief that inflation could be controlled by freezing retail prices without effectively limiting the flow of goods and other evils. The result has been very nearly disastrous. Necessities are disappearing from store shelves because they are unobtainable within legal price ranges. The regulatory maze has affected every industry to a vast extent.

The country is free to face with the fact that these conditions cannot be continued if our industries are to do the job expected of them in the days to come. Producing for peace will be far more difficult than producing for war.

"PARSONS IN UNIFORM"

(New York Times)

An American military chaplain is killed while ministering to the dying on an Italian battlefield. Another is decorated for valor on a shell-torn beachhead in the Solomons. Continually the news columns testify to the gallant service of the "parsons in uniform." Come to think, wasn't it one of these men whose "Praise the Lord and pass the ammunition" gave us our first note of this war?

Thousands of them have left the security of church and manse to descend into the hell of war with our nation's youth. They keep alive the spiritual values in the hundreds of chapels in the camps and posts of this land, but they do not stop there. They go wherever the troops march, the ships sail, the war planes fly. "Ready to preach or to die," they save bodies and minds and souls.

They mark the graves of the fallen. They write letters of comfort to the home folks of the wounded. They solace the sick. They give hope to men despairing of life in the field hospitals. And they listen to the troubles that burden the soldier's heart—troubles the soldier will confide to no one but "the padre."

Scores of tales of the devotion of their calling come back from the fighting fronts. One chaplain is nicknamed "The Lord's Postman." One constructs a portable sanctuary, air-borne, for men in lonely jungle outposts. One makes a worthy communion chalice out of fragments of a wrecked plane. A Negro chaplain does his bit for Army morale as pastor of a labor battalion engaged in the dull, clamorless drudgery of a supply line far behind the battle zone.

Characteristic of them all is one chaplain who wins the Silver Star, yet won't talk of his exploit. A modern Saint Paul, he says, "I could tell of narrow escapes, of strafings, bombings, digging for my life, hunger and thirst, and many other things which are mere incidents along the way. But he prefers to tell of the courage and the patient endurance of the men of his outfit, which to him are a sign of "lovely and imperishable things in each soldier's heart and memory."

THEY KEEP E BANNERS FLYING

Hardly a war plant flying the Army-Navy E award could operate but for the unequaled performance of the private power companies. Yet, electric companies are not given that coveted award. The achievements of the private power industry in making electricity available in home and factory during the war, without rationing and without strikes, has been unsurpassing. But most people take electricity for granted, while others think such socialize monuments as Boonsville and TVA caused the phenomenon of abundant power.

According to reliable sources, generating capacity this year, at least, will be adequate to meet all needs. Since war began in Europe, the privately owned electric companies have installed 7,500,000 kilowatts of additional capacity, while the Federal government is responsible for 2,000,000 kilowatts. The accomplishments of the private investor-owned companies are the fruit of foresight, technical planning, business development, and sound prepareedness. The ample physical facilities and the experienced and loyal organizations required to man them are built on foundations laid decades ago.

The total generating capacity of the country is 63,000,000 kilowatts. Of this amount, the Federal government produces five million kilowatts, with most of the balance provided by private systems. Ironically if a power shortage should occur, it may very likely appear in the territory served by the government hydroelectric plants, which in dry months could be crippled from lack of water. Even this eventuality is not too ominous inasmuch as the plants of the entire private electric industry stand ready to meet emergencies as well as been our war industries rising and the home lighted—with or without E banners.

IN BLACK AND WHITE

Occasionally a document appears which sets forth, in black and white the inner workings of the "unofficial" public-ownership program being pursued in this country. The annual report for 1943 of the Public Ownership League of America is one of those documents. There is nothing unusual about the Public Ownership League itself. As its name implies, it is an open and ardent advocate of socialism. If its members wish to go about the country advocating peaceful adoption of an alien political philosophy, they have a perfect right to do so. What is startling is the governmental company which the League travels with. In reviewing the year's work, the report states "... We have kept up our connection and services to educational institutions, libraries, scientific bodies, Federal agencies and the progressive press.

"We are continuing our cooperation with such Federal agencies as the TVA, the Santee-Cooper of South Carolina, the California Central Valley, Bonneville-Coulee, Boulder Dam, U. S. Reclamation Service, Federal Power Commission, etc.; also with Public Utility Districts in Oregon, Washington, Nebraska, and elsewhere.

"Our relation to and cooperation with both the national and local consumers' cooperatives, and especially the Rural Electrification Administration cooperatives, has been steadily increasing during the year. ..."

From Passamaquoddy, Maine, to Tampa, Florida; from the St. Laurence in New York to San Diego, California; from Sitka, Alaska, to Dallas, Texas—in every state in the Union, the Public Ownership League has made quiet progress in the public power movement."

The Public Ownership League of America has stood for socialized industry for thirty years. Apparently it now stands in a preferred position with some of the most powerful bureaus and commissions of the United States government, as well as public educational institutions.

THE BOYS OF YESTERDAY

Their gallant deeds shine bright as flags, sky blown,
And bring to us who knew them quick, proud tears
And wonder, too. They have so swiftly grown
Who yesterday drove cars like shining spears
Along the highways, laughing, shouting, free
Today they are not boys, but men who fight
To hold our far-flung lines on land and sea
Thru din of shell-torn day and bomb-filled night.
We thought them heedless. Did we then forget
Their fathers fought that they might have a space
Of carefree play? They but repay their debt
They too, would pass to youth the right to race
Thru clover fields, explore a wilderness or stream
Or climb a star-capped hill to pray or dream
—Mary V. Farnum in the Chicago Tribune

FUN FOR THE FISHERMAN

—but not so pleasant for the fish. And yet a fish hook in the nose might not feel so much worse than the congestion and irritation caused by a bad head cold.
