FEELS FINER THAN IN YEARS; THANKS RETONGA

Mrs. Burton Says She Felt So Weak, Nervous And Run Down She Was Becoming Discouraged. Like Different Person Now.

"Retonga proved just the medicine I needed, and I feel better and stronger now than I have in four years," declares Mrs. Miller Burton, 526 Wells St., Madisonville, Ky., and wife of one of the best known oil men in her section. Mrs Burton said she would be selfish not to tell others suffering as she did about Retonga."

"I felt so nervous, weak, and rundown that I hardly knew which way to turn," she stated. "I did not want to eat, and I was several pounds below normal weight. My nerves just seemed to stay on edge and at night I could only sleep in short naps. I had to take strong purgatives, and this always left me weak and trembly. I tried different medicines and treatments until I felt discouraged.

"Retonga proved a blessing to me. I have a splendid appetite and have regained several pounds. I sleep soundly and get up feeling rested and refreshed. The sluggish elimination is relieved, too. I feel more like my old self than in years. Retonga is grand."

Retonga is intended to relieve distress due to Vitamin B-1 deficiency, con-tipation, insufficient flow of digestive juices in the stomach, and loss of appetite. Accept no substitute. Retonga may be obtained at Carlisle Drug Co. or Hopkins Drug Store. —adv.

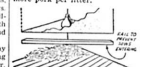
Fixing Up the Farm
by BURTON WILLIAMS

Electric Pig Brooders

KEEPING feed in the feeder, and watering. Anyone can do that. Anyone can have a big pig crop on the place this coming fall. And the farmer who has made preparations in advance for next year's crop is going to be the one who collects the cash for the crop.

Electric pig brooders are inexpensive insurance against excessive baby pig losses. In addition, they are welcome labor savers during that critical first ten-day period in the life of the new pigs. Litters protected by a brooder do not require constant watching to prevent chilling or from the sows lying down on them. If you will install a brooder of the type illustrated now, your ultimate return may be as high as 10 or 15 per cent more pork per litter.



The brooder, built in a corner of the farrowing pen, may be constructed of lumber or, better still because of its fireproof qualities and durability, of asbestos cement board. The 150-watt bulb used for heating has either a standard reflector or one made from a tin-coated wash or cake pan. The reflector fits over a hole cut in the roof of the shelter. To protect the bulb, the hole should be covered with hardware cloth.

In only one litter, a farmer can lose enough pigs to pay for a brooder in every one of his pens. Operating cost is about ten cents a pig.

Buy War Bonds Every Pay Day
Let's Double Our Quota

MANY millions of us will observe Mother's Day next Sunday. In doing so, let us pay tribute to the greatest influence for good in American life. For we need not be told that the mothers of this nation have instilled in each generation of the people, since the birth of the Republic, our cherished ideals of duty and liberty and kindness and generosity and righteousness.

Let us do honor to the mothers of the great host of our young men and women who are fighting in many parts of the world to safeguard and perpetuate the American Way of Life, and to assure peace in the future to peace-loving nations. For we know that the hearts of these mothers are filled with pride, although their spirits are burdened with constant anxiety for those they love most.

To the mothers whose sons have been taken as the ultimate sacrifice at the Altar of Freedom let us offer deepest sympathy, aware that nothing we can say will assuage their grief. For only time and loving memories and faith in the divine purposes of the Almighty can heal the hurt.

-0-

And finally, let us salute the mothers of today's little children who in a few years will be called upon to guide the destinies of our country. For we can be confident that they will put into the minds and hearts of tomorrow's men and women the wisdom and courage and patriotism to carry on the traditions of individual enterprise which have made our nation great.

Interesting Letter From England Written For Mercury By George L. Roberts

England, April 27, 1944

Dear folks:

Having it suggested to me that I write a letter to offer for publication in the Mercury, I will try to furnish a few possible items of interest if and when The Mercury sees fit to print them.

I happen to be in a unit of only twelve men, including an officer, whose job it is, to help keep morning, the boatmen of mail that continuously flows to and from the soldiers.

After being prepared for overseas movement, and given a furlough in February, we were swiftly set on our way from Camp Breckinridge, Ky., to a staging area on the east coast. There we stayed several days getting final inoculations, etc., and on a Sunday morning boarded a train for the port, some forty miles distant. By noon we had boarded the ship and while our destination had not been announced, we all guessed it to be what it is—England.

A troop ship is no luxury liner, and all the room is utilized by the bunks, the men and their equipment. The best place to relax was in the bunk and to move about freely was on deck.

We sailed early on Monday and were soon beset by submarines. Sometimes we, and the number continued to increase until was quite a large convoy. We were heading for the north Atlantic, and as the days passed, the rougher more turbulent became the ocean. To look out upon it, it appeared as a million small volcanoes, all erupting at once and as quickly subsiding and moving about and among one another. Interesting it is for a while and then becomes monotonous and lonely. Then we'd go down to the bunk to relax and read for a while. Some of the hundred- on board, including myself, became seasick in varying degrees. Twice a day we were fed and once each day, had an 'abandon ship' drill. There was no room for recreational facilities, but a religious service was held each evening. After several days we were each given a little booklet, 'A Short Guide to Great Britain," in which were hints on what to and what not to do and say in order to make friends with the British. Then, over the radio we began to hear programs from London, but we were still a thousand miles out. Finally, we arose one morning to find the ocean calm and we knew we were getting near land, but we continued all day and two thirds of the night through those calm waters near Britain. When we arose next day, we had anchored in a beautiful harbor—at a small town in the northern portion of Britain. Quite a little thrill we thought to look upon foreign land for the first time. The village seemed very pretty to us, for it had that "English" appearance about it. It was about noon when we debarked and boarded a train on which we traveled until five o'clock the next morning. The British trains are quite different from ours. The cars are much smaller, especially those of the freight trains. They look together with a chain arrangement and the passenger cars have doors along the side that open like those of an automobile.

The country looked typically English, low stone, brick or stucco houses and some having thatched roof. Hedge rows, clean and well kept land, and small road bridges arched for support of the middle. This was the land where Rudolph Hess had landed by parachute with his bid to make peace for the British. This was the country whose R. A. F. had saved her from invasion and enslavement in 1940 and whose fleet, with it., has thus given us a chance to prepare for war before it was thrust upon us. The people waved at us with the two-fingered V sign and seemed to give us a warm welcome. We first noticed scarcities, by the fact that men and boys would yell to the Americans for cigarettes. They are inferior and high priced for civilians, but the service men get them at the Army post exchange for five cents a pack.

Interesting too, in the towns, in his dark blue helmet, was the sight of the English policeman, the "Bobby."

When the daylight was gone, we witnessed our first complete and sincere blackout. We knew when we passed through a city, but darkness prevailed through the streets.

After riding the train all that night, we arrived at our assigned post about six o'clock in the morning. Here we have since remained and worked and wondered when and where the next move will be. Numerous interesting points and places are within easy distance to reach and see, if we are long on this island. One of the most interesting sights I have yet seen is the historic old university and the old English city of Oxford. Oxford University has been famous for centuries and its various buildings and colleges extend throughout the main part of the city. The buildings are old, but sturdy and of fine architecture, and are adorned with statues on top, around and about them, but they are not new and white and smooth, as on more modern buildings, but show plainly the marks of their age and the wind and weather.

On April 26 I visited the center of the British Empire, London. Among the interesting places viewed was Buckingham Palace, Westminster Abbey, the Parliament Buildings, the home of the prime minister, London Bridge, the Tower of London, and Trafalgar Square. All these are impressive and interesting, to describe them is a long story.

Work comes first, after all, and sight-seeing only at leisure. Our job is to handle the mail for mail is morale to the army. So while some deliver the bombs, some drive the tanks, we destroy the stamps.

With regards to all

Yours,
George L. Roberts

Women who serve in the WAVES will be given military preference on civil service examinations after the war.

Education given WAVES would cost ... to educate each of them cost about $2,000 in civil life.

"This Business of Growing Up"

Every time I turn around, I am reminded of some of the philosophy of childhood, especially the kind of childhood we oldsters had to me," but harsh phrases about children being children of the devil, "age of accountability," and such like. It appeared to us that nothing could be worse than childhood, fettered and hampered as it was. Like Peder Victorious, we ate and tried to grow up fast, though sometimes we just ate. The modern emphasis on childhood came a little too late for me to profit by it. people were still talking about spoiling the rod and spoiling the child. Though many things were done for us in affection, too often it were made to feel even those were sometimes comic, sometimes tragic, sometimes pathetic. An was wrong. Ingrained aversion to eagerness to make one's own way in the world often caused a boy to take, whether any good resulted or not, I cannot blame my parents for my hard years on the farm, but I sometimes feel bitter against society for making me a physical misfit until I braced myself against society and found out the secret of hard work and equally delightful leisure. Sometimes I hope that my children and yours will leave childhood very reluctantly, not so eager as Peder Victorious and I were to become full-fledged men.

RED AND BLUE BLUES—Since

Feb. 27 some 2,000,000 red and blue ration tokens have been circulated as change for coupon points—or that was the original idea. Last week brought reports of several unintended uses of the lime-size disks. More than 12,000 had been dropped into transit-fare boxes, costing transit lines about $33,000 in free fares and jammed mechanisms. A laundry company found ten to fifteen tokens a month in its automatic washing machines. Cigarette and candy machines had a share of them. Even houses of worship were not out of bounds. —Publisher

AN URGENT CALL FOR WASTE PAPER

IT'S NEEDED NOW TO MAKE CONTAINERS TO SUPPLY OUR FIGHTING MEN!

"SOUP'S ON"—THANKS TO PAPERBOARD. Your waste paper, salvaged and converted into new materials for containers, helps carry food and supplies to our fighting men on the fighting fronts.

WASTE PAPER HELPS BLAST THE JAPS. Notice those empty shell containers in the picture. They're made of moisture-proof paperboard—paper that's salvaged from waste and converted for this vital use. Your country needs all the waste paper you can gather!

THERE'S A CRITICAL SHORTAGE OF WASTE PAPER right now—and unless you and everyone answers the call, the flow of supplies to our armed forces may be slowed down. For waste paper is a vital war material. It is converted into containers for shells, cartridges, food, medical and ordnance supplies. And the army and navy need millions of these paper containers every day. Help keep our men supplied with what it takes to win. Help keep the paper mills and carton plants from closing down a single day—gather up your waste paper. Turn it in for victory!
