BIBLE THOUGHT THIS WEEK

"Pray for us unto the Lord thy God . . . that the Lord thy God may show us the way wherein we may walk, and the thing that we may do. Jer. xlii. 2. 3.

THE DIE IS CAST

With the need for certain wartime controls over industry apparently drawing to a close, there is a trend in Washington to perpetuate bureaucratic controls in peacetime. One of the first definite acts in the Administration proposal that government control of coal be restored by enactment of legislation for "price regulation" and to assure "fair competition." The argument for such legislation is that, without it, "whoso will again threaten if the industry returns to the old ways of cutthroat competition," just the opposite reasoning from the Department of Justice which seeks to force cutthroat competition in the railroad and insurance industries.

Whenever a bureaucracy wants to get its hands on an industry or the property of the people, it claims that such a move is necessary to hold down prices, or increase prices, or eliminate destructive competition, or create competition, whichever is most expedient at the moment. Many men are willing to sacrifice the long-range position of their industry and their government for temporary gain.

Commenting on the present move to fasten wartime controls permanently on an industry in peacetime, the Wheeling Intelligencer, of Wheeling, W. Va., says:

"Now, what are the basic problems of the coal industry as they will appear when the war is over? They are the same problems faced by every other industry—the problems of finding a market for the product at a price which will return a reasonable profit and permit the payment of reasonable wages.

"It is entirely possible that the coal problem will be more acute than that of some other industries. It was more acute before, and there are two additional factors which, in all likelihood, will intensify its difficulties. The first is that under the stimulus of war demand, coal development has been expended more rapidly than the prospective market. The second is that, by the hand of the government itself, much of the market for coal has been taken away through the development of waterpower.

"The government, using the money of the taxpayers, has developed waterpower sites which, under competitive condition, could not displace coal in the generation of electricity. So it is proposed, that, in order to meet the economic situation in the coal fields created in part by this governmental enterprise, the public pay another subsidy in the form of fixed wages and fixed prices for coal.

"This is not the way to solve the coal problem. In the final analysis, the coal industry, like all others, must stand on its own feet. That means that it must find a market for the product under the competitive conditions that exist. And that means the finding of more coal and perhaps the suspension of some coal operations.

"The significance of this thing runs far beyond coal. The government cannot subsidize the waterpower industry and the coal industry and stop there. Nor does it intend to. Control must extend all along the line. And that, in the final, logical analysis, means government ownership . . . collectivism."

The drive is now on all along the line to shift the government's grasp on industry from war activity to private activity—witness this proposed coal legislation, the drive of the Department of Justice against insurance industry and the railroads to enlarge Federal controls, and the plans to further extend the government's grip into the field of electric power development, not to mention other industries.

PLANNING FOR PEACE

We Americans have proved conclusively that we know how to plan for war. The Nazis and the Japanese know that they miscalculated when they presumed that our great productive capacity could not be turned from peacetime pursuits to total war.

Unfortunately, all this planning is for a destructive purpose. When we have won the war, we have only deflected from us a great danger—threatened to engulf civilization and bring back the Dark Ages.

What is needed now is at least equally able and effective planning to safeguard peace. Having shown what a nation can do to work for victory in war, we must now learn to work for peace. Eternal vigilance is the price of peace, and our failure to remember this during the period between the two wars has cost us untold treasure and the lives of hundreds of thousands of our men.

A powerful plea planning for peace is made by Dr. Edmund Jacobson, director of the Laboratory for Clinical Physiology of Chicago, in a startling and unusual book he has just published, "The Peace We Americans Need." Dr. Jacobson is a physician and a doctor of philosophy, not a politician or an economist. He is accustomed to dealing with the painful facts of everyday life and to advising people how to better themselves. His book, the new book, he turns his life-time experience with human motives and persons to the present day problems, analyzing our allies as well as ourselves, facing dreadful enemies after war as well as now.

The fact that he is sufficiently concerned about this problem to write a book about it is in itself a hopeful sign. Only when entire nations work for peace, rather than a small group of zealots, are we likely to escape the ravages of warfare, which have become progressively more terrible with advances in technology. When physicians, engineers, business men, laborers and farmers look upon the effort to preserve peace the way they regard the war effort today, mankind may finally end the curse of war.

Dr. Jacobson in this "Plea for Peace Thinking About Our Allies, Our Foes, Ourselves and Our Future," analyzes the plans for lasting peace which have been most advanced officially and unofficially. He points up their points of strength and weakness. And with his conclusion that "however we plan, we can agree that the prime essential to a better world is the continued security of America," there can be no argument.

We can go further, and agree with Dr. Jacobson's final resolve, which he prints at the close of the book, for all Americans in this time of stress:

"I will make friends and we will build for peace; but with God's help I will rely on our own strength to keep me free."

TURFWOMAN DIES

The first lady of the American turf, fabulously wealthy Mrs. Payne Whitney, died Sunday at New York.

A dominant figure in the social world, she was a daughter of John Hay, secretary of state in the cabinets of President McKinley and Theodore Roosevelt. Her husband, Financier Payne Whitney, left an estate valued at $250,000,000 at his death in May, 1927.

As mistress of Greentree Stables, she was the owner of two Kentucky Derby winners and a number of stake and steeplechase champions. Twenty Grand carried her chicory and black silks to victory in the Louisville classic in 1931 and Shut Out triumphed for her in the 1942 race.

Funeral services were held Tuesday at Christ Episcopal church, Manhasset, L. I.

Mrs. Whitney was owner of the extensive Greentree Farm on the Paris pike, eight miles from Lexington.

WAVES TO SERVE OVERSEAS

Final congressional approval has been given to a bill which will permit women of the Navy, The WAVES, to serve outside of the continental limits of the United States. Women who fill these overseas jobs will be taken from volunteers only and will serve in such places as Alaska, Bermuda, Puerto Rico, etc., where the Navy maintains overseas bases.

The women who serve in these bases will serve in offices which pay and assign the men. In hospitals, and in the airfields from which Navy planes operate. It is not yet disclosed just what technical position will be open to women serving outside of the United States.

Women who wish to learn more about how they can serve in this branch of the armed forces, how they can improve themselves, and how they will benefit by the G. I. Bill of Rights should call on Miss Bertha Westfall, who is civilian recruiter for the Navy in Nicholas county.

LOCAL PERSONAL SOCIAL

YESTERDAY, TO-DAY TOMORROW

Tomorrow comes, Today is here,
But Yesterday is gone.
'Tis thus a train of days each year;
Each year precedes another one.
Now if these trains of years were joined
Twould be a lasting train
From time when Earth the first day's ruined
Till no more days remain.

And Yesterday is past and gone;
'Tis far beyond recall.
The deeds that Yesterday were done,
If sinful, will appall
When life is o'er. But what if well
Reward will then appear
On Yesterday good deeds should dwell;
That day is never here.

Today is here and here to stay.
On duty ever stands.
Let every hour be spent today
In doing worthy plans.
Good plans that Time in loving care
Will place upon his book;
The value we to-day can bear
Nor for their own deeds look.

Tomorrow's never here and yet
Tomorrow always comes.
With hurrying speed the minutes fleet
The clock with daily sums.
Each day comes laden with a pack
Brim full of grief and cheer.
Work we to-day, or wail, alack!
Tomorrow's never here.

"IT HAPPENS EVERY DAY"

Half-page payments for retired worker are based on one of the husband's death!

James B. was a self-reliant man if ever there was one, a man who did his full part in life in his own hands. At 67 he was as young in speech and in movement as most men at 50. Indeed, the pace he set both at work and at home was enough to make younger people be careful in contact with. He was proud of his good health. Perhaps he was a little too proud. Whenever he heard of a man in middle years and ill because he smoked shake his head as though it was somewhere in his own fault. "It can't happen to me," his expression seemed to say.

Then he was a furniture worker. He was skilled in hisetrade and had had many years work in it. The only trouble with his job was that it never paid very much. In all the 50 years he had been working he had been able to put by only a few dollars away for his old age.

One day, without any warning, James B. began to have dizzy spells. At first, he was able to work the better part of every day, but finally he reached the stage where it was a tremendous effort for him to get out of bed. But get out of bed he would and drag himself down to the shop and put in possibly fifteen minutes or maybe an hour before someone would have to take him home. He persisted in this against doctor's orders and against his family's wishes until he just couldn't get to the shop any more. His family was told the nature of his illness. It was cancer, and he would never be able to work again. It was just another case of slow death.

James B.'s employer got in touch with the Social Security Board's field office.

"You'd better go down and get James B. to sign a claim for retirement benefits," he advised the field manager. "His illness is taking all his life's savings. He's never going to work again, but, of course you'll not mention that."

When the field office representative called, James B. was in a sad way but still fighting. He'd take his old-age payments temporarily, he said, just until he could get on his feet again. James B. and his wife, who was only a year younger than he, got monthly payments of about $40 until his death six months later.

About a week after the funeral the widow called at the field office.

"My husband wouldn't have told you for the world," she said, "because he was so individualistic and didn't like taking anything from the government. But at the end he was right grateful for social security. Maybe there won't be so bad for you after all when I'm gone,' he said to me, 'you'll have some social security—and I guess we ought to look on it like insurance—that's what the Government man said it was."

"The Social Security Board field office which serves you here is located in the Post Office Building, Lexington. Ky.
