Bonds Over America

WINE GLASS PULPIT

All over New England and white churches, emblematic of Freedom of Religion, are the most beautiful and more impressive shrine than the wine glass pulpit in the Sandown, N. H., meeting house, erected about 1773. The original pews are there, too, where the congregation listened to sermons more than 170 years ago that would have brought banishment to concentration camps under Nazi dominion. That's the American way, liberty for each to worship God in his own way. That is one of the reasons why our men are fighting—and one more reason why we must buy War Bonds to the limit to keep them winning.

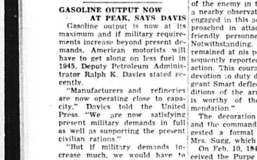
Picketing B-29 Engine Plant



Led by bearers of the American flag, a long picket line moved outside of the buildings of the plant at Paterson, N. J., where Curtiss engines used in the B-29 Superfortresses are made. Soon after this photo was taken the strike was called off, as returned to work to furnish the air forces with the urgently needed engines.

Carries Own Machine Gun Rest

The new 30-caliber machine gun, used at Bougainville, is strapped on the back of a GI. All that is necessary is to put it into action is for the soldier to fall to the ground, hold still, and take the vibrations as this rapid firing machine gun is busy mowing down the Axis forces. This medal aids rapid maneuvers.

"For some time I have been hoping I could tell you folks back home about this outfit of ours and the swell record it has made in World War II from the time it hit the Normandy Beach and began flushing on June 13. Censorship has kept me silent. Division's long engagements pretty much 'under wraps' but we have made a record we'll stack up against any outfit anywhere. In the Public Relation staff has made it easier for us to get the information to you folks back home. Some of the highlights of the 30th's great campaigns and drive through Central cleaned through the press releases.

"This is some of the information we can tell:

"When the 30th Infantry Division troops charged through the greatest concentration of artillery and mortar fire they had met in the War, Germany's attempt to stop the bunkers of the German Siegfried line and establish a bridgehead in the Fatherland: they reached an objective for which, in three months of bitter fighting they had been paving the way since the battle near the beaches of Normandy. Siegfried defenses in the sector north of Aachen where it was heavily manned and then aiding in closing the gap that forced Aachen's fall constituted one of the toughest jobs assigned

"DEAD" ICE

This was very interesting to me—while talking with a Greyhound bus driver recently, he stated that it is quite dangerous on the highway of streets several hours and is run over by cars. He stated that the ice is not as slippery as when it is first formed and untouched by traffic. There may be something to it.

"DRY"-"WET" MAN DIES

A Baptist minister, age 90, who has been preaching for 65 years died recently in a county south of Carlisle. He was known to have been a wet-dry campaign in the county, where there were 19 open saloons in the county seat, this minister came into the county and began to preach against drinking a hard fight in favor of the "drys." Finally he got his name and postoffice address did not
