Salt Requirements Of Milk Cows Vary

A test made by the Borden Company with 150 cows showed the difference in salt requirements by animals.

Over a period of three months, one cow, in addition to the one per cent salt she got in her grain ration, ate 50 pounds of additional salt, or almost a half-pound a day. Another cow, an equally good producer, took no extra salt.

The salt was fed free choice, which means it was kept before the cows so they could eat it as they pleased.

Brown Swiss cows ate an average of 20 pounds of salt in the three months; Jerseys, 17 pounds; Holsteins, 7½ pounds, and Guernseys, seven pounds.

The five highest-producing Jerseys ate 21 pounds each, and the five lowest-producing Jerseys, 12 pounds. The five highest-producing Holsteins ate 12 pounds each and the five lowest producing Holsteins 5½ pounds.

The five top Guernseys ate seven pounds of salt each in the three months and the five bottom Guernseys five pounds each.

SOMETHING NEW FOR TOMATOES

Among the jumble of sprays and dusts promised to make post-war gardening easier one which is immediately available accomplishes something new in the spraying line. Tomatoes are the target for a special hormone mixture developed by the Boyce Thompson Institute. This spray, applied with an atomizer to the first flowers which open, brings about earlier-ripening fruit because it prevents falling of the early blossoms and insures their pollenization. Furthermore, these will be tomatoes without any seeds. While the loss of seeds in fruit eaten fresh may seem advantageous only to a minority, the resulting tomato is much better for juice. This spray is also said to increase the yield.

What Does This Hint About Head Of Jap?

A private of the Seventh Infantry Division on Okinawa, looked out of his foxhole into the half-light of dawn yesterday and there saw a Japanese soldier about 10 feet away.

The American fired one shot. The Jap yelled and fell. The American also yelled and fell.

Pfc. Chester Condero, Sacramento, Calif., said that examination of the Japanese soldier's body disclosed that the American's bullet hit the enemy in the forehead, was deflected back through his helmet, and hit the American in the stomach, wounding him slightly.

Army And Navy Nurses Quota Reached

The Army and Navy have all the nurses they need now.

A Red Cross statement over the week end said the Army's surgeon general has asked the agency to halt enlistments. It had set a goal of 60,000 nurses by June 1.

The Navy previously said its needs for 2,500 nurses had been met.

A nurses' draft bill which passed the House several months ago died in the Senate.
