BIBLE THOUGHT THIS WEEK

The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of Judgment to be punished. —2 Peter, chapter 2, 9th verse.

JEEPS NEED JUICE

The quandary in which government wartime regulatory agencies sometimes find themselves when it comes to allocating strategic materials to industry is humorously illustrated by the Petroleum Industry War Council's recent question: "Which came first (in order of priority)—the jeep or the juice that makes it run?"

While the question was humorous, the problem back of it is deadly serious. In order to meet increased military demands, the petroleum industry has mapped a drilling program of 6,000 wells for the second quarter of this year. Because of stepped-up military needs, the oil industry may have to cut this contemplated number of wells in half. The steel that was destined for expanded well drilling may be diverted to armament production.

As the PIWC warns, "One thing is certain, if the industry does not receive enough materials to meet anticipated increases in military demands for petroleum products, the military may find themselves in the tragic position of having mechanized units that have no fuel and lubricants to operate them.

"Petroleum not only serves as the power for combat units of the air, land and sea; it is also a potent factor in synthetic rubber tires, in TNT explosives used in ammunition, and in a long list of various and sundry items, including medicines. The tonnage of petroleum products shipped from our shores to combat areas continues to be greater than the tonnage of all other supplies combined."

The petroleum industry is proud of the fact that all military demands to date have been met. It would be more than tragic if a task so well begun should falter now because of lack of materials.

An Australian tried to enlist, but was refused because of bad feet. Next morning, he presented himself again before the doctor. "It's no use, I can't take you, as you couldn't stand the marching," said the medico. "But why are you so insistent?"

"Because I'm a flat-footed Australian," was the reply.

FINANCIAL DREAM WORLD

Study of the President's last budget message to Congress, indicates that the Federal debt is to reach at least $300,000,000,000 very soon, which means $2,100 for every man, woman and child; that the "peacetime" normal expenses of government are to be doubled, tripled and maybe quadrupled over what they were before the war; interest alone on the debt at present is 4.5 billions; that the government intends to appropriate unlimited amounts for full employment, public works, rural electrification, financing of crop insurance, loans to stimulate private building, medical care, education, improvement of our homes, cities and farms, and the development of transportation facilities and river valleys. This is not a partial list of what, public, money is to be spent for. Other billions will be spent for relief and rehabilitation of Europe. Only increased taxes or debt can provide the money.

And yet the budget message indicated that the "masses of consumers" will be relieved of excessively high taxes. Apparently, Federal deficits are to go on indefinitely.

The United States can live in a financial dream world until it rolls out of bed.

PROPERTY OWNERS MUST HELP

A study of statistic on fire destruction shows that a comparatively few large fires cause the bulk of property loss. One western city, typical of many others, reports that for the 14-year period ending in 1944 there were 120 major fires. This number constituted only .3 of one per cent of the total number of fires responded to by the fire department, but they caused a loss of $1,356,729, or 61 per cent of the total loss in the city.

Analysis of large fires shows that while they often occur in old buildings, they could have been prevented. For example, in the case of one such fire which resulted in a half-million dollars worth of destruction, $383,000 of which was in food supplies, the record showed that the simplest fundamentals of fire safety were ignored.

First, the building was of excessive area. Second, there were six elevators and many stairways, but none of which were adequately enclosed to prevent upward, rapid spread of fire. Third, an old tunnel, permitting entrance to the basement from across the street, gave an ideal draft for any fire in the basement. Fourth, an excessive storage of cartons, boxes and other shipping containers was in the basement. Fifth, there was a delay in calling the fire department.

Practically every modern fire code would prohibit the construction of a building with those fire hazards. Yet throughout America such buildings are in use. Where fire regulations are not taken in this type of structure by the installation of sprinkler systems and similar devices, the probability of disaster, including loss of life, is high.

Fire prevention authorities hope, through analytical studies of major fires, to bring home to plant managers, store owners and others the thought that "few old buildings were constructed with due regard to fire safety." As a result if the large fires causing such great loss to the nation each year are to be curbed, it must be done through the voluntary cooperation of property owners.

A SHOCKING IDEA?

A phenomenon almost beyond understanding is the exhibition of farm organizations in many parts of the country actively promoting government ownership of power.

It is doubtful if the individual farmer himself really favors such socialistic measures.

If the government is to go into business to save the consumer money by producing the necessities of life at cost, the place to start would be in farming. According to a chart in the February 9 issue of the United States News, the price of food increased 47 per cent from August, 1939, to December, 1944, as compared with an average rise of 28.6 per cent for all items in the cost of living. Electricity, in most communities, has actually gone down in price during the same period.

The government has spent hundreds of millions of dollars at Grand Coulee, for example, to create a great hydroelectric plant and irrigation water for upwards of two million acres of land. If we are to have socialized power from this tax expenditure, why not have government operated farms on the land which the government plans to irrigate, in order to provide the public food at cost, thereby saving the average family many dollars a month?

Of course, the idea of publicly-owned farms is rather shocking to many people, but there is no difference between the public ownership of power plants and the public ownership of farms. They are all part of the same socialistic philosophy.

The farmers who are supposed to be the greatest exponents of private ownership of property, are living in glass houses when they throw stones at the thousands of individuals who have their savings invested in a private electric company instead of a private farm. If we are to adopt state socialism in the United States and do away with the profit system, let's start at the foundation of all wealth—namely, the land—for that is the economic goal of those who would socialize industry piecemeal.

THE RIGHT TO WORK

Not so many years ago, most of us thought that the Constitution and the Bill of Rights guaranteed to every individual the right to work, political freedom, and protection of minorities from coercion by majorities. We used to reason that if a man signed a contract that infringed on his inalienable rights, it would be declared void as contrary to the public welfare. But we seem to have drifted far from the ideals of the founders of this nation, which made it truly the "land of the free."

The case of Cecil B. DeMille, in asking an injunction to prevent the American Federation of Radio Artists from collecting an assessment for political purposes contrary to his views, merely seems historic on the right of the individual to work without paying for the privilege in the United States. A lower California court denied the injunction and held that DeMille must pay the $1.00 because he agreed to all the provisions of the union's by-laws, which included the right to make assessments. By refusing to pay, DeMille is out of the union and barred from his theater program and all radio activity.

As DeMille will take his case to the higher courts, he evidently believes that by virtue of our Constitutional safeguards, for he is forfeiting a $80,000 salary rather than pay the assessment, as a condition precedent to the right to earn a living.

Union membership should be deeply concerned over the principle involved in this issue. Would the California court permit the forced collection of money from employers by an all powerful union for purposes, as a conditional to holding a job?

If the right to work can be conditioned upon paying oppressive assessments, we can no longer call our country "the land of the free."

JUST PLAIN STUPID

The science department of Time Magazine recently published graphs illustrating a precipitous drop in the last few years in the number of Ph. D.'s granted by United States universities in fields of basic sciences. They were termed startling signposts on the road to "scientific bankruptcy." They reflect the shortsighted manpower policy of our government, the effects of which are already being felt seriously in the medical profession. The training of doctors has been reduced dangerously.

An unquestioned authority commenting on the inadequacy of present internship states that: "Many institutions, in their desire to accede to the wishes of the Army and Navy, have arranged their interne-ships so that an experience of no more than two or three months in surgery is obtained. According to the regulations, two-thirds of all the rotating internes—approximately 4,000—every nine months will enter active military service. At the most, not more than a few months' experience in surgery. It is those career but inadequately trained young officers who will serve at battalion aid stations, where the wounded are first brought and where expert surgical judgment is often needed."

No nation, if it wishes to lead the way toward a better civilization, can afford to neglect the sciences as we now are doing.

"Well, K. P., where have you been all morning?" "Filling the salt shakers. Take you told me to." "But what took you so long?" "It's a mighty tough job pouring salt through those little holes."—Fort Sheridan Tower.

Mosquito Control

Carlisle would at a given time flush a quart of kerosene thru the toilet that such procedure would materially lessen the incidence of mosquitoes and make the front porch more habitable and enjoyable. This was done, but with what degree of unison, the department does not know.

Of course, we must await the installation of the complete sewage disposal system after the war before we can expect complete riddance of the mosquito pests.

NOTE—In the item under the graph in Public Health News (page three), second line, last paragraph, the word should be "culture" instead of "Penicillin."

A lot of folks are still wondering how they can send snapshots to those in service when it's so hard to buy roll film to take new pictures. Here's the answer. Have reprints made from your developed films. You might think all your snapshots are old and uninteresting. Well, they may seem that way to you, but did you ever think how much pleasure they might give to some relative or friend in service? Snapshots put spark in their mail and make your letters come to life. So pick out some of your exposed films and take them to the Fasfote dealer near you to have reprints made up on Fasfote's New Style Panel Art Prints. Write often and put a snapshot or two in each letter. Remember, letters and photos are great morale builders. Send a lot of them to the boys and girls in service.
