THE GARDEN

By John S. Gardner, College of Agriculture

Sweet Potato Bedding

While at first it might seem unpropitious for home gardeners to produce their own sweet potatoes, there are many advantages that make it distinctly worth the while. One is that the plants will be at hand when wanted. Another is that they are fresh plants, ready to grow when set. The same fine quality and quantity of potatoes can be secured by using the method of bedding sweet potatoes bred true.

Making the bed is not difficult. A frame made of 10-inch lumber is needed to enclose it, but it need only one yard square to make 250 also in three drawings. The time for bedding sweet potatoes is in April, preferably the first half, to make a first drawing by May 15 and table potatoes by mid-August. Plant drawing may continue for setting as late as June 15 to complete a crop by fruit.

The site for the bed should be high and south to catch full sun. The soil should be mellow and fertile, then it should be spaded and the more within it wet down well.

Then the soil should be laid, close but not touching potatoes. It is advisable to shade the bed and laid out for laying down. Potatoes should be bedded in a double row, bedded whole. Pottery setting should be laid over them to hold them in place as also in three drawings and a 2-inch cover of sawdust, completely rotted tree-branches or light sand.

To draw extra material and prevent the setting, black roofing paper should be laid over the bed, with the first sign that vines are showing to be removed. The bed is complete by stretching it over the frame and banking its sides with soil and straw.

No further attention is needed than perhaps, to water once a week to keep the sawdust from setting.
